INTRODUCTION

This work has been compiled in accordance with the provisions of the following act of the Thirty-second General Assembly:

CHAPTER 223.

ROSTER OF IOWA SOLDIERS, SAILORS AND MARINES.

H. F. 79.

AN ACT providing for the compilation of a roster of Iowa soldiers, sailors and marines in the war with Mexico and the War of the Rebellion, the Spanish-American and Philippine wars, including military service in the Spirit Lake expedition, and other service against the Indians; providing the manner of its publication, distribution and sale and making an appropriation therefor:

Be it Enacted by the General Assembly of the State of Iowa:

Section 1. That the Governor, Attorney General, Adjutant General, Curator of the Historical Department of Iowa, and one soldier of the Civil War whose selection shall be made and certified to the Governor by the Commander of the Department of Iowa, Grand Army of the Republic, who shall thereupon be commissioned by the Governor, which member so selected shall receive the same compensation as that now paid to the trustees of educational institutions for the time actually and necessarily employed, shall constitute a board authorized to prepare in form for publication a complete roster of all Iowa soldiers, sailors and marines of the war with Mexico, the War of the Rebellion, and the Spanish-American and Philippine wars, including the military service of soldiers engaged in the Spirit Lake Expedition and other service against the Indians, and State troops rendering active service during the War of the Rebellion.

Section 2. Said compilation shall contain the main item of record of each officer and soldier, and of each organization, so far as the same is obtainable from the records in the Adjutant General's office, in the War Department in Washington, in the official records of the Union Armies, and from other official and reliable sources. It shall include brief historical sketches of the organization, service and engagements of all Iowa regiments, and other Iowa organizations, with summaries of casualties, list of soldiers confined in Confederate prisons, and those buried in National Cemeteries.

Section 3. Said compilation shall be under the direction of the Adjutant General, and the sum of seven thousand five hundred dollars ($7,500) or so much thereof as may be necessary is hereby appropriated from any moneys, not otherwise appropriated, in the treasury of the State, for the employment of extra help and other necessary expense in making said compilation. The compilation shall be divided into volumes of proper size and shall be printed by the State printer, shall be bound by the State binder in half sheep, and paid for as other public documents. The edition shall be ten thousand of each volume and shall be disposed of as follows: Twelve sets to the State library, twelve sets to the historical library, six sets to the State Historical Society, one set to each public library in the State and one set to each Grand Army Post in the State and one set to each Camp of Spanish war veterans. The foregoing sets shall be distributed free; all other sets and volumes shall be sold by the Adjutant General at actual cost, to be determined by the Executive Council, and the proceeds paid into the State treasury. An itemized account shall be kept and vouchers filed to be audited by the Executive Council and warrants drawn by the State Auditor to pay expenses provided for in this act.

Section 4. This act being deemed of immediate importance shall take effect and be in force from and after its publication in the Register and Leader and the Des Moines Capital, daily newspapers published in the City of Des Moines, Polk County, Iowa.

Approved April 10, A. D. 1907.

In compliance with the requirement contained in section 1 of the act, Col. Geo. W. Crosley was selected as the Civil War soldier member of the board, which was then constituted as follows: Albert B. Cummins, Governor; H. W. Byers, Attorney General; W. H. Thrift, Adjutant General; Charles Aldrich, Curator of the Historical Department, and Col. Geo. W. Crosley.

On the 25th day of May, 1907, the board met in the office of the Governor, and organized by electing Governor Albert B. Cummins, chairman, and Col. Geo. W. Crosley, secretary. The secretary was instructed to supervise the work of compilation—under the direction of the Adjutant General—and these two members were requested to formulate plans for the work and, when such plans were completed, to submit same for the consideration of the board. It was declared to be the earnest purpose of the board to have the work prosecuted with energy, and, with this purpose in view, the preliminary work of investigation was promptly begun.

On June 5th, the general plan of the work was submitted, and adopted by the board. With some modifications and changes, the plan has been carried out as shown in these volumes.

It has been a difficult task to condense the history of the different organizations into what could be fairly considered "a brief historical sketch," as prescribed in the act. History has never dealt, and perhaps never will be able to deal, in the most satisfactory manner, with all those whose achievements go to make up history, even where there are no limitations as to time and space. In the preparation of these sketches, the compiler has confined himself exclusively to the facts as shown by the military records, and to his own personal knowledge of the conditions that pertained to the common experience of the volunteer soldiers of the War of the Rebellion, a knowledge gained by experience as a soldier in active service from the commencement to the close of that war. He could at best point out only the most conspicuous figures and events as contained in the official reports. Only a few of the names of the gallant officers and men whose acts of bravery entitled them to special mention are contained in these reports. In the long period of service which the greater number of these Iowa organizations rendered, they were engaged in so many important expeditions, campaigns and battles, that but few could be described in detail, and none with that particularity of detail which would do them full justice. The brief paragraph opposite the name of each soldier, which follows the history of the organization to which he belonged, is also compiled from the official records. It shows only the leading features of his service. It does not and can not be made to show in detail the service he performed, or what he endured and suffered, and, notwithstanding the careful research of the official records, there will no doubt be some few cases in which even this brief paragraph will be found, either in part or as a whole, incorrect. In all such cases, the injustice to the soldier is due to the official records, and not to carelessness or neglect on the part of those who prepared these revised rosters. General N. B. Baker, who was the Adjutant General of Iowa during, and for a number of years after, the War of the Rebellion, and who was a man of great ability, had the wisdom and foresight to require of the Iowa officers copies of their official reports and returns for preservation in his office, in order that the military record of each organization might be preserved for all time. For this purpose blanks were prepared and sent to the commanding officers of Iowa regiments in the field, upon which to make copies of all their reports and returns. To add emphasis to this requirement, and as an evidence of appreciation of the importance of compliance with it, the Tenth General Assembly of the State of Iowa adopted the following concurrent resolution:

Resolved, by the House of Representatives, the Senate concurring, that the Colonels of Iowa regiments engaged in the service of their country, be respectfully requested to furnish the Adjutant General of the State, at their earliest convenience, with a brief history of their respective regiments, showing what they have accomplished and endured, not only on the battlefield, but upon the march and in camp, with a view that the information thus obtained may hereafter be embodied into a permanent history and monument of the patriotism, the heroism, and achievements of the soldiers of Iowa.

Resolved, that the Adjutant General be requested to communicate the above resolution to the Colonels of all Iowa regiments.

JACOB BUTLER,

Speaker of the House of Representatives.

ENOCH W. EASTMAN,

President of the Senate.

Approved February 23, 1864.

WILLIAM M. STONE,

Governor.

There seems to have been a general disposition to comply with these requests, but, in the exigencies of war, some of these reports and returns were lost in transmission, some were captured by the enemy, and, at the close of the war, the records of the office of the Adjutant General were still, in many respects, in a very incomplete and unsatisfactory condition. General Baker made every effort to remedy these defects by appealing to the officers, who had returned to their homes, to supply the information that would enable him to complete the records. The information thus obtained was not complete, because of the fact that it was mostly given from memory. A part of these incomplete records have been corrected by information obtained from the War Department in Washington and from surviving Iowa soldiers. It is greatly to be regretted that this work of revision was not undertaken at an earlier date, when a larger number of the surviving soldiers of the war were still living. After the lapse of nearly half a century, it is difficult for most men to remember with accuracy events that did not make the most lasting impression upon their minds. They can remember the most important events distinctly, but, when it comes to recalling the personal record of comrades in their company or regiment, it is only of those with whom their relations were most intimate that they can give positive information. There was now and then a soldier who kept a daily diary in which he recorded the principal events that occurred during his term of service. The compiler has personal knowledge of only one such private record that covered a period of three years' continuous service in the field. Could all the records of this kind which have been preserved have been collected, they would no doubt have been of great value in compiling a work of this character.

The errors and omissions which may occur in these revised rosters must therefore be accounted for by the causes before mentioned. In many instances the only record obtainable is the name, age, date of enlistment, residence, date of muster into the service of the United States, and the date of discharge or muster out of the soldier. In such cases, particularly where the soldier served for the full term of his regiment and was mustered out with it, the inference is that his history is identical with that of his regiment. He may have participated in every battle in which his regiment was engaged, but, as only the names of those who were killed, wounded, captured, or missing in action, or those who were favored by special mention, appear in the official reports, his name would not appear as a participant. The men who had the good fortune to go through their entire term of service without sustaining any serious injury, and who were also so fortunate as to have escaped being the victim of some form of sickness, have no record—as a rule—except that of continuous service; but such a record is remarkable, and certainly most commendable.

Col. George H. Turner, who compiled the record of service of Michigan Volunteers in the War of the Rebellion, in his introductory refers to the class of soldiers above alluded to, and also to those reported as missing in action, in the following forceful and truthful statement:

It scarcely occurred to the officers who made their official returns to the different departments that forty years after the conflict an individual history of each soldier who participated would be written. * * * The hardships of a campaign, the duties exacted night and day, the constant attention to matters of vital importance, are not conducive to literary efforts of biography or general history. It is pathetic to know that thousands upon thousands of Union soldiers who participated in many of the most desperate battles of the Civil War have no records of such battles to their credit in the official reports. A limited number were fortunate enough to have their names recorded by their officers as participating in such engagements.

It was sometimes impossible in the stirring times of war for commanding officers to give authentic and final history of men who disappeared in a great battle, as in many cases the bodies of the dead could not be found, and if possession of the field was yielded to the enemy, the fate of those who were made prisoners of war could only, if ever, be learned through unreliable Confederate sources.

For such heroes who died for their country and who sleep in nameless graves, their epitaph is inscribed in this history as "missing in action." A more honorable or heroic epitaph could not be penned.

It will thus be seen that the same difficulties encountered in the compilation of this work existed elsewhere. In fact, the same conditions prevailed in all the states, and it may be safely assumed that the record of personal service of Iowa soldiers recorded in these volumes is as nearly correct and complete as that published by any other state. The total enrollment, together with the Summary of Casualties which follows the Historical Sketch of each regiment, has been carefully compiled from the records, and demonstrates more clearly than language could describe the tremendous sacrifice of life, and the untold suffering endured by these brave sons of Iowa. The State has honored itself in thus endeavoring to do justice to their memory.

Volumes I. and II. of this work, containing the historical sketches and revised rosters of the First to the Sixteenth Regiments of Infantry, inclusive, had been published prior to the commencement of the session of the Thirty-third General Assembly, which made provision for the continuation and completion of the compilation, by the adoption of the following Act:

CHAPTER 248.

ROSTER OF IOWA SOLDIERS, SAILORS AND MARINES.

H. F. 171.

AN ACT providing for the completion and distribution of the roster of Iowa soldiers, sailors and marines as provided by chapter two hundred twenty-three (223), laws of the Thirty-second General Assembly, fixing number of volumes, and making an additional appropriation therefor.

Be it Enacted by the General Assembly of the State of Iowa:

Section 1. Appropriation—how drawn. That the sum of ten thousand ($10,000.00) dollars or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated from any moneys, not otherwise appropriated, in the treasury of the State, for the employment of the extra help and other necessary expense to complete the compilation of the roster and record of Iowa soldiers, sailors and marines provided by chapter two hundred twenty-three (223), laws of the Thirty-second General Assembly, and the same shall be drawn and expended as provided for in section three (3) of said chapter.

Section 2. Number printed and bound—distribution. The edition of each volume hereafter printed shall be three thousand, instead of ten thousand, as provided by said chapter. Two thousand of each edition shall be bound in half sheep and the remainder shall be stitched and stored for future use and so bound whenever required for sale or distribution. One hundred sets of said rosters and record shall be placed in the hands of the Adjutant General and one hundred sets in the State library, for exchange with libraries of other states, the War Department Library, and the Librarian of Congress and such other institutions of other states as have extended or may hereafter extend courtesies of like character to this State; one set shall be issued to each Camp of the Union Veteran's Legion, located in the State of Iowa; the remainder of the edition shall be disposed of as provided in section three of the aforesaid chapter, except as said section is modified by the provisions of this act.

Section 3. In effect. This act being deemed of immediate importance shall be in force from and after its publication in the Register and Leader and Des Moines Capital, newspapers published at Des Moines, Iowa.

Approved March 12, A. D. 1909.

The work of compilation had been discontinued on December 1, 1908, on account of exhaustion of the appropriation, and was resumed on March 17, 1909, when the new appropriation became available.

First Regiment

Iowa Volunteer Cavalry

HISTORICAL SKETCH

FIRST REGIMENT IOWA VOLUNTEER CAVALRY

The official records in the office of the Adjutant General of the State of Iowa show the original rosters of the twelve companies which composed the First Regiment of Cavalry, at the date of their muster into the service of the United States, together with the additional enlistments in each company, which followed soon after the completion of the muster of the regiment. The regiment was organized under the proclamation of President Lincoln, bearing date May 3, 1861. Burlington was designated as the general rendezvous, and the companies were ordered into quarters at that place, by Governor Kirkwood, July 18, 1861, with the exception of Company M, which was ordered into quarters at Davenport, September 2, 1861, and was there mustered into the service September 12, 1861, and was shortly afterwards ordered to join the other companies at Burlington. Companies A to I, inclusive, were mustered by Captain Alexander Chambers, of the United States Army, at Burlington, on the 30th and 31st days of July, 1861, who also mustered Companies K and L, at Burlington, August 17, 1861, and Company M, at Davenport, September 12, 1861. The total number of the regiment—rank and file—at muster in was 1,035, and this number was soon increased, by additional enlistments, to 1,245.¹ The regiment had the honor of being the first volunteer cavalry organization, which had enlisted for a three years' term of service, to be accepted by the Government. The personnel of the regiment was of the highest character, both as to enlisted men and officers. Among its commissioned officers were some of the ablest men in the State. Its first commander, Colonel Fitz Henry Warren, was one of the most noted journalists of his time. He had become the Associate Editor of the New York Tribune, and his earnest advocacy of the cause of the Union, and his insistence upon an active and vigorous prosecution of the war had been effectual in arousing the patriotism of loyal citizens, and causing them to realize the magnitude of the rebellion, and the tremendous task of subduing it, which confronted the Government.

The officers and men of the regiment preferred to select and own their horses, many of which they had brought with them from their homes. The law at that time permitted this personal ownership, the Government allowing ample pay for the use and risk of the animals. The regiment was thus able to secure a better average quality and value of horses than those usually supplied to the cavalry regiments of the Regular Army.

The short time the regiment was allowed to remain in its first camp, near Burlington, was utilized to the utmost extent in learning the rudiments of the cavalry drill and the general character of the duties of officers and enlisted men in camp and field. The time was too short, however, to properly fit them for the arduous work of an active campaign against the enemy, in which the greater part of the regiment was very soon to engage. In fact, no amount of previous training could have fitted them for the peculiar character of the service they were called upon to perform during the first year of their term. They had to learn, by practical experience in the field, the character and methods of the enemy with whom they were contending, and, as will be seen, they passed through a hard and most difficult school of experience, which involved vastly more than is taught in the regular military curriculum.

On the 30th day of September, 1861, six companies of the regiment embarked on steamers and barges and were conveyed to St. Louis, where they arrived October 2d, and went into quarters at Benton Barracks, where troops were constantly arriving and departing for the field. Here they were joined by four companies, two days later. Companies L and M were detained in camp at Burlington, waiting to receive their uniforms and horse equipments, and did not arrive at Benton Barracks until October 17th. The Government was not at that time, and for a long time later, able to procure the arms necessary to fully equip all the cavalry regiments. Revolvers and sabers were the arms with which the regiment was first equipped. With such arms it was necessary to engage the enemy at close quarters, in order to secure effectual results. The carbine was an important part of a cavalry soldier's armament, particularly when fighting dismounted, as he was more or less frequently required to do when engaged against an infantry or dismounted cavalry enemy. The cavalry soldiers not provided with carbines were, therefore, placed at a disadvantage, except when fighting at very close range or engaged in a hand to hand conflict, when the saber and revolver were the most effective weapons.

The State of Missouri was rent and torn by the terrible factional strife between those of her citizens who adhered to the cause of the Union and those who had espoused the cause of the Rebellion. Armed conflicts were of frequent occurrence, and the number of those who had cast their lot with the rebel cause had increased to such proportions as to tax to the utmost the available resources of the Government, in its endeavors to protect the loyal citizens, who were subjected to pillage and murder at the hands of lawless bands, often composed of those who had been their friends and neighbors previous to the breaking out of fratricidal war. These rebel bands, being mostly well mounted and familiar with the country, could only be successfully pursued by cavalry. Into this difficult and dangerous field of service came the First Iowa Cavalry, to learn its first lessons in the dreadful trade of war. The conditions which then confronted the regiment were largely the same during the greater part of its long term of service and have been well described by one of its members, who subsequently achieved fame and distinction in civil life,² and whom the compiler of this sketch takes the liberty of quoting, as follows:

The early October days found us in Missouri, and thenceforth we were assigned to duties such as none could have well performed save only the highest in the soldierly and patriotic qualities of patience, fortitude, unflinching courage, and supreme devotion to a cause. Every hardship known to war fell to our lot. The somber picture we daily faced was for years unlit by a single gleam of those glories which, in regular warfare, light up the soldier's pathway to glory or the grave. Our battlefields were in the byways and waste places, where the human foxes we followed had their holes. Our marches were often in the night time, for from every hilltop, and sometimes from the tree tops, looked out a watcher to note our progress and fix the ambush. And though compelled to this duty, we were left without proper arms, and for two-thirds of our term of enlistment were not so well armed for the business we were engaged in as were the enemies we followed. But our duty was performed without repining, and I believe that if the history of our whole service could be written up with that minuteness with which Kinglake has told the story of the Crimean campaign, that it would appear that for individual daring, for extent of country covered and protected, for extent of marches, for number of conflicts, and for soldierly endurance and self denial, no regiment in the service excelled that to which we belonged, or deserved better of its country.

The compiler of this historical sketch finds it impossible to go into particularity of details without exceeding the limitation of space allowed him in this work, and he will, therefore, confine himself to a brief description of the principal events in the history of the regiment.

On the 18th of October, 1861, the First Battalion of the regiment, consisting of Companies A, B, F and G, under command of Captain Leffingwell, left Benton Barracks under orders to report to General Pope. The battalion joined the troops under General Pope's command and was assigned to the duty of advance guard and scouts, on the march to Springfield. On the 9th of November the Union forces evacuated Springfield, and that portion of the State was, for a time, left in the possession of the rebel army under General Price. Captain Leffingwell was ordered to proceed to Otterville with his detachment. In the meantime, the Second Battalion had been ordered to take the field, and shared, with the First, the hardships of the winter campaign; while the Third Battalion, under Colonel Warren, remained on duty at Benton Barracks until March 6, 1862, at which time he was ordered to Sedalia, Mo., where he arrived, with the Third Battalion, on March 9th. From that date the entire regiment was engaged in active operations, by companies and detachments, operating from different points and covering a wide extent of territory.

The first engagement in which any portion of the regiment participated was fought on the 19th day of December, 1861, on Black River, near the town of Milford, Mo., by a detachment of the First Iowa Cavalry, under command of Major Torrence, a detachment of the Fourth United States Cavalry, and a section of artillery belonging to a Missouri battery. This force attacked a camp of recruits, who were on their way to join the rebel army under General Price. In his official report to General Halleck, General Pope gives a detailed account of this engagement,³ from which the following extracts are taken:

. . . Colonel Davis marched promptly and vigorously with the forces under his command, and at a late hour in the afternoon came upon the enemy, encamped in the wooded bottom land on the west side of Blackwater opposite the mouth of Clear Creek. His pickets were immediately driven in across the stream, which was deep, miry, and impassable, except by a long narrow bridge which the enemy occupied in force. . . . Colonel Davis brought forward his force, and directed that the bridge be carried by assault. The two companies of the Fourth Regular Cavalry being in advance, under the command respectively of Lieutenant Gordon and Lieutenant Amory, were designated for that service, and were supported by the five companies of the First Iowa. Lieutenant Gordon of the Fourth Cavalry led the charge in person with the utmost gallantry and vigor, carried the bridge in fine style, and immediately formed his company on the opposite side. He was promptly followed by the other companies. The force of the enemy posted on the bridge retreated precipitately over a narrow open space in the woods, where his whole force was posted. . . . Our forces still continuing to press forward, and the enemy finding his retreat south and west cut off, and that he was in presence of a large force, and at best could only prolong the contest a short time, surrendered at discretion. His force, reported by the Colonel commanding, consisted of parts of two regiments of Infantry and three companies of Cavalry, numbering in all 1,300 men. . . . About 500 horses and mules, 73 wagons heavily loaded with powder, lead, tents, subsistence stores, and supplies of various kinds, fell into our hands, as also 1,000 stand of arms. . . . The numbers as stated were reported to me by Colonel Robinson, Colonel J. C. Davis, and by Major Torrence, First Iowa Cavalry. . . . Within five days the infantry forces comprising this expedition have marched 100 miles, the cavalry more than double that distance; have swept the whole country of the enemy west of Sedalia and as far as Rose Hill to a line within 15 miles of the Osage; have captured nearly 1,500 prisoners, 1,200 stand of arms, nearly 100 wagons, and a large quantity of supplies. The march alone would do credit to old soldiers, and it gives me pleasure to state that it has been performed with cheerfulness and alacrity. . . . A list of our killed and wounded will be transmitted as soon as possible. . . .

It will thus be seen that very important results were obtained from the expedition and engagement, in which the First Iowa Cavalry bore a very conspicuous part.

The next engagement—known as the “Battle of Silver Creek”—was participated in by four companies of the First Iowa Cavalry, associated with detachments from the First Missouri and “Merrill’s Horse” and the Fourth Independent Company Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, (commanded by Captain John S. Foster,) all under command of Major Torrence, of the First Iowa. The following brief extracts from the official report of Major Torrence will serve to show the efficient service rendered by the detachment of the First Iowa:

FAYETTE, HOWARD COUNTY, Mo., Jan. 11, 1862.

. . . . By order of General Pope we proceeded from Otterville to this county, for the purpose of dispersing sundry rebel camps which were being formed in the vicinity, and arrived here Sunday, Jan. 5, 1862. On the morning of the 8th five companies of the Fifth Iowa Infantry arrived from Boonville, and, leaving them to guard our camp here, the command was on the march at 8 o’clock. We arrived near the location of their camp, which was situated on or near the headwaters of Silver Creek, . . . about 4 P. M., and made the attack at half past four P. M. The enemy were protected by dense woods and underbrush and there was no approach to them save through a narrow road, only wide enough for two men to ride abreast. Our troops were ordered to dismount, every fifth man holding horses, and we prepared to fight on foot. The engagement commenced at once. . . . The enemy faltered, gave back, retreated in disorder, and we soon had possession of their camp.

The report further states that the pursuit was soon abandoned and the troops returned to the rebel camp, which was destroyed, there being no transportation for the captured property. It was found impossible to overtake the rebels, they being well mounted and familiar with the roads and by-ways of the wooded country in which they made their camps. In this engagement the command lost 27 men, killed and wounded. The loss of the enemy could not be definitely learned, but was supposed to be about 60 in killed and wounded. James Convey, of the First Iowa, was mortally wounded and died the next day. The others belonging to the regiment, who were wounded, were James Scott, Thomas Fletcher, Stephen M. Sexton, Cornelius Thompson and Andrew Johnson.

During the remainder of the winter the companies of the First and Second Battalions of the regiment were almost constantly on the move. They dispersed many rebel bands, and made it a difficult matter for recruits to get through to the rebel army, except those who went in small squads or singly, and kept off the main roads. Among the important captures was that of Brigadier General Tom Price, son of Major General Price, the commander of the rebel army. Many horses, mules, wagons and other property useful and necessary to the enemy were captured or destroyed. But the men who supported the rebel cause were of such desperate and stubborn nature that no disaster seemed sufficient to discourage or conquer their resolute spirits, and they continued their efforts to regain control of the State, even believing that they might eventually reverse conditions and transfer the theater of war to the North. It became evident that the struggle was to be prolonged, and that all the resources at the command of the Government would be required to fully restore its authority in those border States. In fact, that result was not accomplished in every portion of the State of Missouri until the close of the war.

With the opening of spring, and under more favorable weather conditions, the operations of both Union and rebel troops became more active and aggressive. On the 6th of March, 1862, Colonel Warren left Benton Barracks with the Third Battalion and arrived at Sedalia, Mo., March 9th. The whole regiment was now in the field. The headquarters of the regiment were, for a time, at Clinton and, later, at Sedalia, the different detachments reporting their operations to Colonel Warren, who made his reports to Brigadier General James Totten, commanding the District of Central Missouri. There are many of these reports showing the constant activity of the different detachments, their skirmishes with the enemy, prisoners, horses and other property captured, casualties sustained, etc.,⁴ which demonstrate the importance of the service rendered by the regiment during this period of the war. The following account of one of these encounters will serve to show the general experience of the different detachments and may be considered as typical of all, differing from the others only in matters of detail, number engaged, etc.

On the 14th of April, 1862, a detachment of the regiment, under command of Lieutenant Colonel C. E. Moss, had a skirmish with a band of rebels on Sac River. On the evening of the same day, Lieutenant Colonel Moss, who had proceeded with Lieutenant Barnes and a part of Company K to the town of Montevallo, leaving Captain Bryan to bring forward the rest of the command, found himself with his small force suddenly surrounded by a superior force of the enemy. In the fight which ensued the leader of the rebel band was killed and quite a number of his men were killed and wounded. The First Iowa Cavalry had two men killed and seven wounded in this engagement.⁵ The following brief extract, from the official report of Lieutenant Colonel Moss, shows the conduct of his men in this engagement:

... Never did men under similar circumstances display greater gallantry than those with me that night. Being exposed to a most murderous fire from double their number of men well armed, not a man flinched or showed any disposition to surrender, or give up the contest. Lieutenant Barnes and Andrew J. Pugh (my guide) deserve my warmest thanks for their cool gallantry and determined courage. The rebel band was found to be composed mostly of persons living or staying in the immediate vicinity of the place.

During the month of May, 1862,⁶ headquarters of the regiment were at Butler, Mo. On May 2d, Colonel Warren, with 200 men and a section of the First Missouri Light Artillery, started on a scout to the Marias Des Cygnes River, and, on the 11th, returned with 30 prisoners and a quantity of arms, ammunition and a number of horses and mules captured from the enemy. On the 15th, the forage train was fired upon, four miles from camp, by a band of bushwhackers, and three men were killed and one wounded. On the 26th and 27th the forage train was again attacked and four men were killed and one wounded. These attacks were made with a rush, the enemy quickly disappearing, and in neither case were the cavalry, sent in pursuit, able to overtake them. During the month of June, 1862, the twelve companies of the regiment were engaged in scouting over a wide range of territory covering six counties, and doing guard duty at the various posts in the military sub-district to which they were assigned.

The headquarters of the regiment remained at Butler during the month of July. On the 8th, a detachment of 100 men, under command of Lieutenant Reynolds, attacked a band of guerrillas, led by the notorious Quantrill, on the Lotspeach farm in Cass County; but, finding the enemy strongly posted and their number superior to his own, he gave up the effort to dislodge them, after having lost one man killed and two men wounded. He retreated to Clinton. On the 9th, all the men and officers of Companies A, G and H, stationed at Clinton, left camp under command of Major James O. Gower, and were joined near the Lotspeach farm, on the 10th, by detachments from the companies of the regiment stationed at Butler, under command of Captain W. H. Ankeny, of Company M, and also by a small body of troops from Warrensburg belonging to other regiments; the entire force being under command of Major Gower. In the meantime the rebel force, under Quantrill, had retreated to a strong position among the wooded hills of Big Creek timber, four miles west of Pleasant Hill, in Cass County. There Major Gower attacked them and, after a short but fierce engagement, succeeded in routing them, killing and wounding a large number and capturing some property. In this engagement the troops under Major Gower exhibited great bravery and received his hearty commendation. The First Iowa Cavalry lost 3 killed and 10 wounded in the engagement, among the latter Lieutenants Reynolds and Foster and Adjutant D. A. Kerr. During the remainder of the month the companies of the regiment were engaged in scouting in the vicinity of the various posts occupied by them.

During the month of August, 1862, the headquarters of the regiment remained at Butler. On the 2d, detachments from Companies E, L and M, under command of Captain Caldwell, Company I, encountered in the timber on Clear Creek, St. Clair County, a band of guerrillas, said to number 300 or 400 men, well armed and mounted, under command of one Clowers, a notorious outlaw. After a brief but desperate struggle, in which the enemy lost 11 killed, our troops, being greatly outnumbered, retired and awaited reinforcements, having sent for them to Butler, Clinton and Osceola. The next day Colonel Warren arrived with the needed reinforcements, but, in the meantime, the enemy had fled and could not be overtaken. In the engagement on the 2d, Captain H. H. Heath, of Company L, led the charge with his detachment of 75 men. In his report⁷ Captain Heath says:

. . . . In this engagement our loss was four killed and fourteen wounded, myself among the latter number. The names of the gallant men who fell that morning are Albert C. Alford, Caleb C. Botwood and Michael J. Driscoll, of Company L, and Elisha A. Roland of Company M. We also lost several horses killed, among which was my own. In this engagement were many who had never been under fire before, but their courage was manifest amidst a most terrific fire of musketry within a few paces of them and from an enemy, for the most part, concealed within a thickly studded ambush of undergrowth, and who could only be discovered as they rose and poured forth their murderous fire upon us. Lieutenants Berryman and Edsell, and Sergeant Dunham, of Company M, particularly distinguished themselves as brave and worthy officers. Subsequent pursuit by Colonel Warren, with a considerable force, discovered the fact that the rebels had placed a wide tract of country between themselves and the First Iowa Cavalry.²

About one week later the headquarters of the regiment were removed to Sedalia, and from there Colonel Warren, with a large detachment of his regiment, proceeded to join General Blunt's forces at Lone Jack, Mo., and took part in the pursuit of several thousand rebels, marching, while absent, over 300 miles. On the 26th, the regiment returned to Camp Warren, near Clinton, and went into camp there for a brief rest. Previous to starting on this expedition—on August 7, 1862—the posts at Butler and Osceola had been evacuated and all the companies of the regiment were, for the first time in many months, concentrated in one camp. The regiment remained in camp until September 20th, on which date it started on the march to Springfield, arriving there on the 28th, at which time it was assigned to the Second Brigade, First Division, Army of the Southwest. Colonel Dye, of the Twentieth Iowa Infantry, commanding, and marched to Camp McClellan, twelve miles west of Springfield, where it remained until the close of the month.

On the 1st of October, 1862, the regiment, with its brigade and division, started on the march in pursuit of the enemy,—a march made memorable to all the troops of the brigade and division on account of its length, its circuitous course, the elusive and baffling movements of the enemy and the hardships endured. On the 2d the command passed through Mt. Vernon and camped on Center Creek. On the 3d continued march to Newtonia. On the 4th came up with the rear of the enemy and had a slight skirmish. On the 9th continued march to Cassville. On the 16th the regiment was transferred to Second Brigade, Third Division, Army of the Frontier. On the 17th continued march, and on the 18th marched all day and went into camp near Bentonville, Arkansas. On the 20th marched all night and the next day and bivouacked on White River. Marched night of 21st and 22d to Glade Creek, near Huntsville, and, halting there for supper, marched all night to camp on White River. On the 23d marched back to Cross Hollow, Arkansas, going into camp at Valley Springs. On the 27th ten companies of the regiment made a night march to a point eight miles southeast of Fayetteville, Arkansas, and had a skirmish with the enemy on the morning of the 28th, in which Samuel C. Dickerson, Quartermaster of the regiment, was killed. On the 29th the ten companies returned to camp at Valley Springs.

On the 1st day of November, 1862, the regiment was in camp at Valley Springs, Ark. On the 4th it marched to Elkhorn Tavern, on the old Pea Ridge battlefield, arriving there late at night. During the remainder of the month the regiment marched from point to point in pursuit of the enemy, and officers and men were in the saddle almost constantly during the day and, many times, far into the night. The record shows a distance of 154 miles marched prior to the 25th of the month, on which date all the available officers and men of the regiment started from Camp Curtis on a scout to Yellville, Ark., from which they returned on the 30th, having marched while on the scout 250 miles, and making over 400 miles for the month.

On the 3d day of December, 1862, the regiment, with its brigade and division, left Camp Curtis, marching southward, and, at midnight on the 6th, reached the headquarters of General James G. Blunt, at Cane Hill, Ark., having ²It will be noted that the names of the wounded men are not given in this report, and that often the names of neither killed nor wounded are given in other reports of engagements in which the regiment took part. The reader is therefore referred to the subjoined Roster, in which the names of all the killed and wounded appear.

marched 98 miles, and having been in the saddle 18 consecutive hours. The Second Battalion of the regiment was detailed as rear guard for the wagon train of the division, and consequently did not arrive in time to participate in the battle which ensued. Owing to the fact that General Herron's division had been fighting for several hours before General Blunt's division arrived upon the battlefield and attacked the enemy in the rear, the heavy part of the fighting was over at that time, and darkness soon put an end to the conflict. Moreover, the conditions were unfavorable for bringing the cavalry into close contact with the enemy, and therefore the part taken by the two battalions of the First Iowa was mainly that of skirmishers and flankers, which subjected them to smaller loss than they had sustained in many previous engagements. Nevertheless, the First and Third Battalions of the regiment performed their whole duty at the battle of Prairie Grove. They obeyed the orders they received implicitly and accepted the minor but important positions assigned them after their arrival upon the field, and received the full share of credit to which they were justly entitled. The Second Battalion was also doing its full share of duty where it had been placed, guarding the supply train, the protection of which was so important to all the troops composing the division. Every true soldier knows that to be assigned to such duty, when a great battle is in progress; to hear the roar of battle and know that, when the official reports are written, his name and that of his company or regiment will not be included among those who were active participants, always occasions a feeling of regret. The battle of Prairie Grove was the one of greatest magnitude in which the First Regiment of Iowa Cavalry participated during its long and arduous term of service. That it did not have a conspicuous part in that hard-fought battle was not the fault of its officers and men or of its Brigade Commander. The regiment did all that it was ordered to do, and earned the full measure of credit that was accorded to it in the official reports. While it was not theirs to share in the glory of having been in the midst of the battle, it was theirs to have stood ready and willing to lead the charge into the thickest of the fight, had they been called upon to do so.

On December 27th the regiment started with the expedition, under command of Generals Blunt and Herron, to Van Buren, Ark., and took part in the capture of that place on the 28th, together with five Arkansas River steamboats loaded with large quantities of army supplies, and many prisoners. Returning from that expedition on the last day of the month and year 1862, the regiment went into camp at Prairie Grove, but only remained there during the first day of the new year.

On the 2d day of January, 1863, the Third Division of the Army of the Frontier, of which the regiment was now a part, left its encampment at Prairie Grove and marched by way of Fayetteville, Huntsville and Carrollton to Forsyth, on White River, Mo. Major Daniel Anderson, with about 400 of the regiment, left the division at Fayetteville on January 4th and proceeded to scour the country in advance and along the flanks of the line of march, captured a number of prisoners, gained much valuable information, and arrived at Huntsville two days in advance of the division. On January 10th, Major J. W. Caldwell, with 400 men, marched from Huntsville to a point on Buffalo River, a distance of 60 miles, and, early on the morning of the 11th, surprised and captured 75 guards in charge of extensive saltpeter works, which had been constructed by the rebels for the manufacture of powder. These works were situated near the summit of a mountain. The troopers of the First Iowa Cavalry clambered up the mountain side, taking the guards by surprise, and causing them to beat a hasty retreat. The machinery and buildings, together with several tons of saltpeter, were destroyed by fire. Captain McQueen, with 200 men, was sent to destroy works of a similar kind about ten miles distant, which was accomplished in like manner, the guards offering but feeble resistance. While returning, Captain McQueen succeeded in capturing a drove of horses and mules destined for the rebel army, together with the guards in charge; in this affair Lieutenant Dustin, Sergeant Morrill and Corporals Newell and Wisener displayed great efficiency and gallantry. On the same day Captain Jenks, who was on picket duty with the detachment, was attacked by a band of rebels, and, in the fight which ensued, the rebel leader was killed by Captain Jenks. The detachment rejoined the main command at Carrollton on the 14th.

On the 15th, all the available cavalry force of the division, under command of Colonel Gower, made a rapid march to Yellville, to intercept the rebel General Marmaduke on his retreat, after his unsuccessful attack on Springfield. A few prisoners captured, with a considerable amount of property, was the result of the expedition, the rebel General succeeding in making good his retreat into the mountains of Arkansas. Colonel Gower then proceeded to Forsyth with his command. While the regiment was in camp there, Colonel Gower went to St. Louis to receive a supply of carbines which had been received there for the use of the First Iowa Cavalry. During his absence the main part of the command marched to Lake Springs, near Rolla, Mo., where they arrived March 31st, going into camp and establishing regimental headquarters at that place. To this camp Colonel Gower returned, bringing with him 250 Colt's revolvers, 600 Sharp's breech-loading carbines, and 400 cavalry sabers, thus giving the regiment a complete set of arms, for the first time in its history. The regiment was also supplied at this time with a remount of fresh horses, and was thus splendidly equipped for the active work of the next campaign, which was about to begin.

On the 20th of April, 1863, about 600 men and officers of the regiment, under command of Major Caldwell, joined the expedition under General Vandever, against the rebel forces under Marmaduke, then advancing against Cape Girardeau, Mo. General Vandever did not succeed in intercepting Marmaduke's force, which attacked the troops under General McNeil at Cape Girardeau and, having been repulsed, fell back towards Jackson. General Vandever, moving rapidly, came in close proximity to a portion of the rebel forces on their retreat, and the First Iowa Cavalry, which led the advance, came up with them. In the skirmish which ensued the regiment had five men wounded. The pursuit was continued to Chalk Bluff, where the enemy succeeded in crossing the St. Francis River and rejoining the main body of Marmaduke's command. The regiment returned to Lake Springs May 15th, having been gone 26 days, marching over 500 miles and suffering greatly on account of insufficient rations.

The regiment now proceeded to Pilot Knob, with orders to report to General J. W. Davidson, and was assigned to the Second Brigade of the cavalry division commanded by that officer, then encamped at Arcadia. Here everything that could possibly be dispensed with, in the way of camp equipage, was stored, and the troops, unincumbered with anything that would impede rapid movement, were put in readiness for the prosecution of an active and vigorous campaign. On July 1st the division marched from Arcadia to Fredericktown, thence to Bloomfield, where it arrived on the 12th and remained eight days. The town was fortified, a garrison left to defend it, and a hospital established, in which all the sick and disabled men of the division were left in charge of Assistant Surgeon C. H. Lothrop, of the First Iowa Cavalry. On the 20th, the division resumed its march over difficult roads, crossed the St. Francis River at Chalk Bluff and continued its march southward. Captain J. D. Jenks and Lieutenant Hursh, with 50 men of the First Iowa Cavalry, were sent in advance with dispatches to General Steele, at Helena, Ark., which difficult and dangerous duty was gallantly performed. The command reached Clarendon, on White River, on the 9th of August, and there joined the army under command of General Steele. The movement of the combined Union forces against Little Rock now began.

On August 13th, Captains McQueen and Jones, with 170 picked men of the First Iowa Cavalry, were embarked on a gunboat and barges, with orders to proceed down White River, effect a landing on the west side and make a reconnaissance, in order to find where the main body of the enemy was encamped. A landing was effected at Aberdeen, in presence of a rebel picket post. Leaving the gunboat at anchor in White River, for a cover in case of retreat, the detachment dashed through the country to the westward, commenced to drive the rebel pickets within half a mile of the place of landing, and moved up the river, behind the line of rebel pickets stationed along the river, to Devall's Bluff, a distance of 55 miles, then moved west through Brownsville, eluding the superior forces of the enemy by shifting positions during the night, until ascertaining beyond a doubt that the rebel encampment was on Bayou Metoe. The detachment then countermarched, keeping under cover of the timber as much as possible, until a superior force was discovered marching on the prairie which had to be crossed. The detachment charged from the timber, taking the enemy unprepared; a running fight for five miles ensued, the rebels making a rapid retreat. The detachment then re-embarked and arrived at Clarendon the evening of the 15th. The whole army crossed White River on the 18th, and the cavalry division arrived at Brownsville on the 25th, where a brisk engagement ensued, in which the First Iowa Cavalry had the advance, driving the enemy into their encampment beyond Bayou Metoe. In the engagement which followed on the 27th, the First Iowa, under command of Colonel Anderson, charged the rebels, driving them across Bayou Metoe, and following them to the end of the bridge in face of a heavy fire of artillery and musketry from the enemy posted on the other side, with the hope of saving the bridge,—the only means of crossing the deep and sluggish bayou,—but were unable to do so, as the rebels had prepared combustible material, which was lighted quickly and the bridge destroyed. In this engagement the regiment had 37 men killed and wounded, the heaviest loss they had thus far sustained in any single encounter with the enemy. The officers and men behaved with the greatest gallantry. Colonel Anderson had his horse shot under him while leading his men in the charge.

The cavalry division now moved southward; a pontoon bridge was laid across the Arkansas River during the night of September 9th, and, on the morning of September 10th, the cavalry led the way across the bridge and brought on the engagement which resulted in the capture of Little Rock about sunset of that day. After crossing the river, the First Iowa was actively engaged throughout the day, and recaptured two howitzers which had been taken by the enemy during the early part of the engagement. The regiment now went into camp near Little Rock, where it remained during the following winter in comparative quiet. Scouting parties and guards to forage trains had occasional skirmishes with the enemy, in which the casualties were not heavy, but there was much sickness and many died from malarious diseases, while many others were months in a state of doubtful convalescence. Among the latter was Captain A. G. McQueen, who, on account of a severe attack of typhoid fever, was for months prevented from participating in the operations of the regiment, and who twice tendered his resignation in order to give his position to some one who was in physical condition to discharge the duties of the office; but, as a just recognition of his value as an officer, his resignation was not accepted, and an order was issued detailing him as Senior Inspector General of Cavalry for the Military Division west of the Mississippi, and assigning him to duty at New Orleans, La., until his health should have been sufficiently recovered to enable him to rejoin his regiment and resume active duty in the field. The regiment was thus able to retain the services of one of its most capable and efficient officers, who subsequently won well deserved promotion and became its Commander.

On the 8th of December, Captain Jenks, with a detachment of 250 men of the regiment, made an attack on a rebel encampment and captured 39 men and a considerable amount of camp equipage. Colonel Gower having resigned, Lieutenant Colonel Anderson was promoted to Colonel, Major Caldwell to Lieutenant Colonel, and Captain McQueen to Major.

During the early part of 1864 a sufficient number re-enlisted to entitle the regiment to assume the title of a veteran organization. According to the terms of their re-enlistment, the men were entitled to a thirty days' furlough in the State of Iowa, but the conditions then existing imperatively demanded their presence in the field, and it was more than a month later when those who survived were permitted to enjoy the brief visit to their homes. The regiment started on the march to Camden on the 22d of March, 1864. Owing to the great scarcity of forage, many horses had died during the winter, and about 400 men were without mounts and compelled to march on foot. The regiment was much of the time in advance of the army, and, on March 30th, had a brisk engagement with the enemy, and again on April 2d, when it engaged in a running fight for five miles, driving the enemy before it, and again, on April 4th, when the enemy made a stubborn resistance, inflicting a loss upon the regiment of 39 men, killed and wounded. The regiment was the first to enter the rebel works at Prairie d'Ane. On April 15th the mounted men were again ordered to the front and skirmished with the enemy for six hours, when, by order of General Rice, the dismounted men were brought to the front and deployed as skirmishers, and the enemy was driven back through the city of Camden. It will thus be seen that, upon this important expedition, the First Iowa Cavalry had done its full share of the fighting and had fully sustained its reputation for bravery and efficiency. The object of the expedition having been accomplished, the veterans of the regiment, 520 in number, were ordered to proceed to the State of Iowa on furlough. The following extract from the order of the division commander will serve to show the high estimation in which the regiment and its gallant Lieutenant Colonel was held:

"V. The Brigadier General commanding the division has been highly gratified with the cheerfulness and alacrity shown by the regiment under the particular hardships of this campaign, as well as its handsomely sustaining the reputation for bravery which belongs to Iowa troops.

VI. To Lieutenant Colonel Caldwell, the division commander is under obligations for the skill and bravery he has shown as commander of the Third Brigade, and especially for his untiring energy and hearty, cordial, and effectual co-operation in the plans of the campaign.

By order Brigadier General E. A. Carr,

C. H. DYER, A. A. G."

The veterans, having sold their horses to the Government, started from Camden on foot, on the 24th of April, on their way to Little Rock, from which point they were to be furnished with transportation to Davenport, Iowa. On the march to that place, however, they twice encountered the enemy,—first at Mono River, near Mark's Mills, on April 24th, and last in the battle at Jenkins' Ferry, on Saline River, on April 30th, arriving at Little Rock on the 2d day of May, 1864. There the non-veterans (those who had not re-enlisted) remained.

while the veterans (those who had re-enlisted) were given a thirty days' furlough and departed for their homes in Iowa. Here let it be said that, while the distinctive title of "Veterans" was bestowed upon the men who were willing to continue in the service of their country until the close of the war, and was an honorable distinction well deserved by them, their comrades who had faithfully complied with the terms of their enlistment, and who preferred to return to their homes when their three years' term of service should expire, were not subjecting themselves to criticism by declining to re-enlist. They, too, were veterans, in fact if not in name, and, having been true to the obligations they had voluntarily assumed, could return to their homes and receive the full meed of thanks and honor which was freely accorded them by their State and Nation.

The veterans arrived at Davenport on May 17th, where they received a royal welcome. They were given furloughs for thirty days, and, at the expiration of that time, re-assembled at Davenport, and were soon on their way south to rejoin their comrades at Little Rock; but, upon their arrival at Cairo, Ill., were ordered to return to St. Louis, where they were supplied with horses and camp equipage and were sent into North Missouri, where they were again divided into detachments and stationed at different points along the railroad, for the purpose of guarding the road against incursions of rebel bands, who were constantly making raids to capture trains and both army supplies and other freight passing over the road. While upon this duty the veterans lost seven men killed and several wounded. It was a repetition of their past experience in Missouri, and they found the conditions that existed during the summer of 1861 but little changed. In their ignorance and desperation the rebels refused to recognize the hopelessness of their cause and were most bitter and unrelenting in their hatred and cruelty toward Union citizens and their families, and it was their custom to give no quarter to the Union soldiers who fell into their hands.

On the 1st of October, 1864, the veterans were relieved by other troops, and, marching to Jefferson City, were there assigned to General Sanborn's Brigade and at once moved against their old enemy, General Sterling Price, who, with his rebel army, had again invaded Missouri. After the battle of Boonville, in which the veterans of the First Iowa Cavalry participated, they were retained on duty at Major General Rosecrans' headquarters, as escort, scouts and couriers, until the end of the campaign. They then returned with General Rosecrans to St. Louis, remaining there for a few weeks and receiving a complete outfit of everything necessary for another extended campaign. They were then conveyed to Cairo, by rail, and thence, by steamer, to Little Rock, arriving there on the 29th of December, 1864, and rejoining the non-veteran portion of the regiment, from which they had been so long separated. The non-veterans had, in the meantime, been under the command of Major J. D. Jenks, and had performed active and efficient service in the country surrounding Little Rock; had been engaged in numerous skirmishes, and had received the commendation of the General commanding for their faithful performance of duty. Their term of service having expired, the non-veterans were mustered out of the service at Little Rock and returned to Iowa, while the recruits were assigned to the companies of the veteran organization.

The beginning of the year 1865 found the veteran regiment united, well mounted and equipped, ready and willing to perform its full share in crushing out the great Rebellion, which was everywhere on the wane, and which it was now evident could not continue throughout the year. The very desperation of their cause, however, seemed to inspire the enemy with a fixed purpose to fight to the last, and fight they did until their resources were entirely exhausted.

Lieutenant Colonel McQueen was now in command of the regiment. On January 14, 1865, a detachment of the First Iowa, together with detachments from other regiments of the division, all under the command of Major James D. Jenks, of the First Iowa, was ordered to proceed to Dardanelle, about 100 miles up the Arkansas River. The troops were conveyed by boats. After effecting a landing, Major Jenks at once led his command against a force of the enemy 1,600 strong, and, after a brisk engagement, defeated them. For his successful management of the expedition Major Jenks was given the brevet rank of Lieutenant Colonel. On January 22d the regiment, together with other troops, moved against a rebel force encamped near Camden, and, after a brief engagement, defeated them, capturing a number of their men and horses. Lieutenant C. W. W. Dow was particularly commended for his gallantry and efficiency in leading the advance guard on this expedition. The names of the killed and wounded in these and subsequent engagements will all be found noted in the subjoined Roster.

On February 12, 1865, the regiment received orders to proceed to Memphis, Tenn., and, conveyed by transports, reached that city on the 20th, remaining there until March 4th, when it became part of a cavalry force which went in pursuit of the rebel General Forrest. During this expedition Lieutenant Colonel McQueen, with a detachment of the First Iowa, met and defeated a portion of Forrest's command on the Tallahatchie River. The regiment returned to Memphis on February 22d. It then moved to Collierville, Tenn., and, from its camp at that place, sent out detachments in pursuit of the roving bands of the enemy who still infested the country, killing many and finally dispersing them.

The rebellion was now practically suppressed, and it seemed that the Government might soon be able to dispense with the service of the regiment, and the men were looking forward with fond anticipation for the order for their discharge. This hope was rudely dispelled, however, when orders were received for the First Iowa, Fifth and Twelfth Illinois, Second Wisconsin and Seventh Indiana Cavalry Regiments to embark on transports, proceed to Alexandria, La., and there report to Major General G. A. Custer for further orders. The command arrived at Alexandria June 22d, 1865, and on the following day General Custer issued an order, the strict enforcement of which brought great hardship and humiliation upon the splendid regiments composing his command. The full details of the terrible experience through which the regiment passed while under command of this Martinet of the Regular Army are given in the report of Lieutenant Colonel A. G. McQueen to the Adjutant General of Iowa, including copies of official orders, affidavits and correspondence upon the subject, in which the honor of the regiment is most completely vindicated.⁹

General Custer was a brave and dashing cavalry officer who had won distinction in the eastern army for his efficient services in many battles, but he had been trained in a severe school of discipline and was utterly unfit for the command of volunteers, under the conditions that existed at the close of hostilities. He lacked the essential qualifications—kindness of heart, tact and good judgment of human nature—which would have enabled him to enforce a proper degree of discipline, and, at the same time, have secured the respect and attachment instead of the cordial hatred of the men under his command. His reckless bravery later cost him his life, and that of every man under his command, when he made an attack with an inferior force upon an overwhelming force of Indians, under the command of the famous chief, "Sitting Bull," on the northwestern frontier. It is altogether to the credit of the men and officers of the First Iowa Cavalry that they were able to submit to the cruel indignities to which they were subjected while under the command of General Custer, instead of being driven to open insubordination and revolt. Every true soldier understands the necessity for discipline in an army, and yields willing obedience, even when the discipline is more severe than necessary, and enforced in the most unpleasant manner by a tyrannical officer. It was a new and hard experience for these brave men, and the official records show that they submitted to it rather than have the history of their service tarnished by a single act of insubordination.

From the 22d day of June to the 8th of August the regiment remained at Alexandria, when it started on the march to Texas. It was halted at various points in that State until November 4th, on which date it arrived at Austin, the Capital of the State, where the headquarters of the regiment were maintained during the remainder of its service. Detachments were stationed for a few weeks at a time at different county seats, from the borders of the Indian Nation to the southern portion of the State, for the purpose of preserving order and assisting the civil authorities in the discharge of their functions, and the enforcement of the laws in the trial of offenders by the courts, which could only be done by the presence of soldiers. The turbulent character of a large part of the population, and the demoralization resulting from a long continued war, rendered the presence of soldiers necessary for the protection of the lives and property of the better class of citizens who were endeavoring to secure the restoration of the functions of civil government. The First Iowa Cavalry contributed its best efforts to accomplish this desirable result.

On the 15th day of February, 1866, the regiment was mustered out of the service of the United States at Austin, Texas, and, four days later, started for Davenport, Iowa, where it arrived on the 13th of March. On the 16th day of March, the officers and men received final payment, the regiment was disbanded and all returned to their respective homes, to resume the peaceful avocations they had abandoned when they responded to the call of their country. Lieutenant Colonel McQueen, who was in command of the regiment at the time it was mustered out, says, in closing its official history:

"Lieutenant Henry L. Morrill, Regimental Adjutant, is particularly deserving of honorable mention for his long and efficient services as an officer and soldier, and especially for the valuable aid rendered in superintending the making out of the final muster out papers of the regiment."

The final paragraph in the history has deeply impressed the compiler of this sketch. It reads as follows:

"On account of not having the regimental records at hand many deeds of individual heroism, which might with propriety be mentioned, are omitted in this history. The number and names of those belonging to the regiment, who died and were killed in battle, have already been reported to your office, and I will trust to the pen of the future historian to speak, so their immolation will not be forgotten."

The compiler deeply regrets his inability to fulfill the trust thus imposed. While he had much of the experience which pertained to the common lot of the soldier who served from the commencement to the close of that great war, the infantry organization to which he belonged was never in close proximity to the First Iowa Cavalry, and he has no personal knowledge of the deeds of individual heroism of its members; but, if he had such knowledge, or had been able to obtain it from others, the limitations under which this sketch has been compiled would preclude the reference to such cases, beyond the very limited number found in the official reports. The brief paragraphs opposite the names contained in the subjoined Roster must therefore suffice. The official records from which the Roster is compiled give only a brief summary of the facts connected with the service of each member of the regiment, but they are the only source of information to which the compiler has had access. While some errors and omissions will no doubt be found, it is believed that, in the main, the records have been correctly kept, and that this compilation will preserve to posterity the record of these brave men of Iowa, who, nearly half a century ago, went forth to fight the battles of their country. In conclusion, it may be justly claimed for the First Iowa Cavalry—as an organization—that it made a record second to none in the long list of splendid Iowa regiments which won glory and honor for State and Nation in one of the greatest wars in history.

Second Regiment

Iowa Volunteer Cavalry

HISTORICAL SKETCH

SECOND REGIMENT IOWA VOLUNTEER CAVALRY

The Second Regiment of Iowa Cavalry was organized under the proclamation of President Lincoln, dated July 23, 1861. The twelve companies composing the regiment were ordered into quarters by Governor Kirkwood, between the dates July 20 and Sept. 4, 1861. Davenport was the designated rendezvous, and there the different companies were mustered into the service of the United States by Captain Alexander Chambers, United States Army, on dates ranging from August 30 to September 28, 1861. The total number of enlisted men and officers of the regiment at the date of muster in of the last company was 1,001, but this number was considerably increased by additional enlistments before the regiment left the State.¹

The regiment was fortunate in having for its first commander a graduate of West Point, who, at the time he received his commission from Governor Kirkwood, was a Major in the Third Regiment of United States Cavalry, with a record of fifteen years of honorable service in the Regular Army.² While he was a strict disciplinarian, he was also just and fair in the enforcement of discipline and in his treatment of the officers and men under his command, and thus secured their confidence and respect. He was a superior military instructor, and his regiment rapidly acquired the rudiments of a military education so necessary for the work which was before them, and the practical experience which soon followed—under the command of this thoroughly trained officer—was of more value than a longer period of drill and instruction in camp would have been. The other field officers were very capable men and soon demonstrated their fitness for the discharge of their respective duties. They were without military training and experience, but possessed of superior intelligence, and soon became proficient in the knowledge of tactics and the handling of men in action. This was particularly true of Lieutenant Colonel Edward Hatch, who was possessed of the true military spirit in such large degree that he was from the first conspicuous for his superior ability, and was held in the highest esteem by Colonel Elliott and by all the officers and men of the regiment.

On the 7th of December, 1861, the regiment left Davenport and was conveyed by transports to St. Louis, where it went into quarters at Benton Barracks. During the time it remained there Colonel Elliott exerted himself to the utmost in imparting such instruction as would secure for the regiment as much knowledge of the theory and art of war as it was possible to obtain before it would be called upon to take the field. While at Benton Barracks the regiment suffered greatly from sickness and there were a great many deaths. There was probably no period in its subsequent history when disease made such sad havoc in its ranks in so short a time. The men had not yet become used to the great change in conditions of living; had not yet learned how to properly prepare their food; and, above all, the sanitary conditions of the barracks were bad, the ventilation was poor and their quarters were overcrowded. It was therefore a welcome change when the order came for the regiment to take the field.

On the 17th of February, 1862, the regiment, with its horses and camp equipage, embarked on transports and was conveyed to Bird's Point, Mo. Shortly after its arrival there, Major Love, with four companies of the regiment, started in pursuit of a band of rebels supposed to be encamped near Charleston, Mo., but did not succeed in finding them. On February 28th the remainder of the regiment, under command of Colonel Elliott, proceeded to Charleston where it was joined by the detachment under Major Love and the entire command then went in pursuit of the rebel forces under Colonel Jeff Thompson, but did not succeed in overtaking them, they having separated into small parties and dispersed upon the approach of Colonel Elliott's command. The capture of a few rebels was the total result of this first short expedition into the enemy's territory, but, as the weather and roads were bad and Colonel Elliott had yet to learn the methods adopted by the elusive enemy, (who had the advantage of a thorough knowledge of the country,) this initial movement served to enlighten the officers and men and gave them an experience by which they were benefited in their next expedition, which was productive of excellent results. The compiler here avails himself of the information contained in the official record and report of the subsequent operations of the regiment in the campaign which followed:³

. . . On February 27th began our active pursuit of Jeff Thompson's army towards New Madrid, driving in his scouts and bodies of cavalry, over a country almost impassable, fording, sometimes swimming, swamps scarcely penetrable, in snow and rain, capturing prisoners and horses. This duty occupied the regiment until March 12th, when we rejoined Pope's army at New Madrid in time to participate in the attack and bombardment of that place; after it was reduced, from March 12th to April 6th, occupied continually guarding teams, scouting and picket duty. April 7th, crossed the Mississippi, our advance under Lieutenant Gustavus Schnitger, being the first troops in Island No. 10, capturing 200 prisoners. We pursued the retreating enemy toward Tiptonville. We were then ordered back to Camp New Madrid, being absent five days.

On the 12th of April, 1862, the regiment, with the Army of the Mississippi, commanded by General Pope, embarked on transports at New Madrid and moved down the river toward Fort Pillow, but, by order of General Halleck, the objective point of the expedition was changed, and the fleet of transports proceeded to the mouth of the Tennessee and thence up that river to Hamburg, where they landed and the troops disembarked. Here the regiment was assigned to the Second Brigade, Cavalry Division, Army of the Mississippi, and, with that organization, at once entered upon an active and aggressive campaign. Colonel Elliott was placed in command of the brigade, and Lieutenant Colonel Hatch was left in command of the regiment. The following extracts are made from the official reports of Lieutenant Colonel Hatch,⁴ and embrace the principal operations of the regiment to the close of the month of August, 1862.

. . . IV. April 29th, we attacked and burned the enemy's camp (97 wall tents) at Monterey, Miss., thoroughly routing them; lost one man killed and three wounded. We took eleven prisoners.

V. May 3d. received at nine o'clock in the morning an order from Colonel Elliott, commanding the Second Brigade, Cavalry Division, to proceed with the entire regiment immediately to the Memphis and Charleston Railroad, between Burnsville and Glendale, and there to destroy a trestle work and otherwise to render useless, for the time being, the railroad at that point.

Without quoting the details of the movements of the regiment which led up to the perfect and complete execution of this order and the capture of several prisoners, besides a number of mules and wagons, without any casualties to his command, suffice it to say that Lieutenant Colonel Hatch returned with his regiment to its camp at 8 o'clock in the evening of the day he received the order. The promptness and skill with which the order was executed served to increase the confidence of the regiment in its commander; the officers and men, having faith in his good judgment and bravery, were ready to follow him in any dangerous undertaking and to yield implicit obedience to his orders. That this confidence was fully justified was demonstrated only a few days later, as the following extracts from his official report will show:

VI. May 8th—Skirmish with the enemy near Farmington, lost two men killed and six wounded. Lieutenant Washburn cut his way through the enemy after being captured, losing his horse by many balls.

VII. May 9th—Complying with an order of Colonel Elliott, commanding Second Brigade, Cavalry Division, to report with Second Regiment Iowa Cavalry to General Granger, I did so. Receiving instructions from General Pope to report to General commanding the advance at Farmington, reported at twelve o'clock to General Palmer, who ordered me to throw out two companies on left of the main Farmington road, and hold the balance of the regiment in reserve under the hill, where the crossing of the swamp approaches Farmington. Our infantry who had held the field above us being driven to the brow of the hill, General Paine ordered the regiment to charge the enemy's batteries. Moving column to top of hill, I ordered Major Coon, with companies H, G, C and part of A, of the Second Battalion, and Major Love's Third Battalion, to charge the battery on our left in echelons of squadrons. Deploying the columns to the right and left, when we had passed our infantry lines, we attacked the skirmishers and supports of the enemy, driving them in and killed and wounded some. The battery on our left near the Farmington road, on account of the ground being impracticable, the battery and supports protected by a fence; the fire from this was very severe, and though our men could not reach the guns, the enemy's gunners, evidently alarmed at the charge, ceased working their guns. Major Coon's Battalion, led by him, gallantly attacked the battery near the building known as the cotton mill (the center battery). Lieutenant Reily, commanding Company F, of Third Battalion, attacked and carried two guns in battery on our extreme right. The center battery was fairly carried, the gunners driven from their guns, the enemy limbering up his guns without taking them off the field. Finding our horses badly blown, from a long charge over rough ground, and the infantry of the enemy in great force, I, under a heavy fire, ordered all companies on my right to retreat to the right and rear, forming on the swamp road, and those on my left to join the regiment in this road. I ordered Major Hepburn to move to the rear, retaining Major Coon with two companies to pick up the wounded and scattered. My orders were carried out better than I could have expected. My Chief Bugler's bugle was rendered useless in the charge; four of my orderlies having had their horses killed, and two being shot out of the saddle when transmitting orders. The conduct of officers and men was in every way commendable. Captains Lundy, Egbert, and Lieutenant Owen, wounded near the enemy's guns, Lieutenants Horton, Moore and Schnitger all had horses killed under them. Captain D. J. Crocker and Lieutenant Moore of Company K, Captain McConnell and Lieutenant Foster of Company M, Captain Kendrick of Company E, Captain Eaton and Lieutenant Belden of Company L, all of the First Battalion, led in the finest manner by Major Hepburn, rode through the hottest fire and were rallied by Major Hepburn on the right when retiring, in fine style, and formed in good order in the rear of the swamp to await orders. Major Coon, Captain H. Egbert, Captain William Lundy, Lieutenant Owen and Lieutenant Horton of the L Battalion, led the charge on the right in the finest manner, riding boldly in advance of their commands, and in advance of the entire regiment. The daring of Lieutenant Queal, commanding Company B, was conspicuous, cheering his men to the very muzzles of the enemy's guns. Captain Bishop of Company I, and Captain Graves of Company D, obeyed my orders promptly under heavy fire. Lieutenant Schnitger, Acting Regimental Adjutant, and Lieutenant Metcalf, Battalion Adjutant, did their duties to my entire satisfaction. Before and at time of charge, Captain Freeman and Lieutenant Eustra, with detachments of Companies A, G and H, as skirmishers dismounted, did excellent service in the swamps on our left, holding the enemy's skirmishers in check. There were about 400 men in the charge. Our loss will scarcely exceed fifty killed and wounded, fifty horses killed and fifty rendered unserviceable from wounds.

The report of Lieutenant Colonel Hatch (from which the preceding quotations were made) describes with great particularity of detail the operations of the regiment during the remainder of the campaign. Limitation of space will preclude further extended quotations from the report covering this period of the service of the regiment. The compiler will, however, endeavor to cover in a condensed form the most important events (as shown by the report) which occurred, from the day following the charge at Farmington up to and including August 27, 1862, upon which date the summer campaign may be said to have ended and the fall campaign begun.

On May 13th a portion of the regiment had a skirmish near Farmington, driving the enemy's skirmishers within their lines. On May 26th, detachments from the Second Iowa and Second Michigan Cavalry, under command of Lieutenant Colonel Hatch, left camp near Farmington in the evening, under orders to locate and attack a force of the enemy supposed to be encamped near Burnsville, or Jacinto, Miss., encountered the enemy's pickets near the latter place in considerable force, but the main body had made good their retreat, and, in obedience to his orders, Lieutenant Colonel Hatch abandoned the pursuit and returned to camp the next morning, having marched thirty-five miles during the night, a part of the way through swamps and over difficult roads. On the 28th, the Second Iowa and Second Michigan Cavalry, under command of Colonel Elliott, (the Second Iowa under command of Lieutenant Colonel Hatch,) left camp at Farmington and marched rapidly by a circuitous route, for the purpose of deceiving the enemy as to the object of the expedition, and, on the morning of May 30th, appeared before the town of Booneville, the force of the enemy which had been left to guard the town falling back before him with but slight resistance. The capture of Booneville was followed by very important results, as the following statement of Lieutenant Colonel Hatch will show: "I found standing on the track an engine disabled, 26 cars loaded with 10,000 stand of arms, 1,000 small and side arms, 800,000 rounds of ball cartridge, 100,000 rounds of fixed ammunition for six and eight pound guns, three mounted field pieces, one car of horse equipments and team harness, haversacks, cross belts, cartridge boxes, canteens and knapsacks for 10,000 men; and a large amount of stores. The railroad depot was filled with commissary stores, 3,000 stand of arms, shells of a large size, medical stores and 300 kegs and barrels of powder marked 'Alabama Powder Company.'"

Upon entering the town the telegraph wire was cut, thus preventing speedy communication to the enemy and the arrival of a sufficient force to save the immense quantity of supplies which had fallen into the hands of the regiment. The train and buildings were at once set on fire and everything destroyed, thus inflicting great damage to the rebel army which had just evacuated its stronghold at Corinth and was in full retreat southward. Shortly after this brilliant exploit, in recognition of his valuable service as a brigade commander, Colonel Elliott was promoted to the rank of Brigadier General and assigned to the position of Chief of Staff to Major General Rosecrans, and Lieutenant Colonel

Hatch was promoted to Colonel of the regiment. The only casualties in the regiment during the expedition to and capture of Booneville were one man killed, two wounded, and four captured by the enemy while scouting. On May 30th, Captain Kendrick, while on a scout with a detachment of the regiment, had an encounter with the enemy, in which he lost one man killed and two wounded, and captured fifty prisoners.

On the 4th of June the regiment and brigade, while in pursuit of the retreating rebel army, had a brisk engagement with the rear guard of the enemy, in which the regiment lost two men killed, eight wounded and two missing.⁵ A prisoner, captured in this engagement, reported the loss of the enemy to have been thirty men, killed and wounded. During the greater part of the month of June the regiment was almost constantly engaged in watching the movements of the enemy in advance of the army, had several skirmishes and captured a number of prisoners. On June 24th it moved forward, taking the extreme advance of the army, the Second Iowa being encamped nearest the enemy, one-half mile in advance of the brigade.

On the morning of July 1, 1862, the enemy was discovered in strong force approaching the camp of the Second Iowa, whose pickets reported the number of rebels in sight as greatly superior to the combined strength of the regiment and that of the Second Michigan, and those two regiments, constituting as they did the outpost of the Union army, would have been justified in retreating until they could have been within supporting distance of the infantry. But the officer⁶ who had succeeded General Elliott in command of this small cavalry brigade saw his opportunity for a strategic movement that would enable him to overcome the superior force to which he was opposed. The entire strength of his command was far less than the maximum number of a single regiment of cavalry, (less than 800 men,) but, from this small force he boldly detached four companies, two from each regiment, with orders to move rapidly and gain the rear of the approaching force of the enemy. He then posted his remaining force in a strong position and awaited the attack of the enemy, whose force was estimated to be not less than 4,000. The two cavalry regiments were splendidly armed and mounted, had absolute confidence in their leaders, and the result proved the confidence was not misplaced. Without attempting to give the details of the fighting which ensued, suffice it to say that the attack of the rebels was met by such a heavy fire that they fell back in disorder and were met by a charge of the detachment which had been sent to attack them in rear, which resulted in their being driven from the field with heavy loss. The enemy made every effort to get their killed and wounded off the field, but left 17 killed and 12 wounded, among them two officers, and, in addition, 13 men captured. The total loss of the enemy was estimated at over 100, while that of Colonel Sheridan's Brigade was but 47 killed, wounded and missing, divided about equally between the Second Iowa and Second Michigan Cavalry. Considering the disparity in numbers, this was one of the most notable achievements of cavalry troops that had occurred ⁵While only the names of those mentioned in the official reports are contained in this historical sketch, the casualties are all noted in the subjoined roster, opposite the name of each soldier who was killed, wounded or missing in action, or who died of wounds, disease or other cause, or was discharged, resigned or transferred to another command. Everything found in the official records relative to the record of the soldier who at any time belonged to the regiment has been faithfully transcribed, except in the comparatively few cases in which it was found possible to correct errors and omissions by reference to the War Department in Washington, and from other sources known to be reliable. The mistakes that may be found in the Roster must therefore be attributed to the Official Records of the Adjutant General of the State of Iowa.

⁶Colonel Phillip H. Sheridan, who afterwards won fame and distinction. He was then Colonel of the Second Michigan Cavalry.

up to that time, or, as a matter of fact, that occurred at any time during the war. The General commanding promptly issued a highly commendatory order from which the following extract is taken:

GENERAL ORDERS

No. 51.

HEADQUARTERS, ARMY OF THE MISSISSIPPI, July 2, 1862.

The General commanding announces to this army that on the 1st instant Colonel P. H. Sheridan, Second Michigan Cavalry, with eleven companies of the Second Michigan and eleven companies of the Second Iowa Cavalry, was attacked near Booneville by eight regiments of rebel cavalry under Chalmers, and after an eight hours' fight defeated and drove them back, leaving their dead and wounded on the field. The coolness, determination and fearless gallantry displayed by Colonel Sheridan and the officers and men of his command, in this action, deserve the thanks and admiration of the army.

By order of General Rosecrans, United States Army.

W. L. ELLIOTT,

Brigadier General and Chief of Staff.

This order was promulgated to the cavalry division commanded by General Gordon Granger, and ordered to be read at the head of each company in his command, together with an order of his own, from the concluding part of which the following extract is taken:

A soldier's dearest meed is his consciousness that his duties to his country have been well and worthily performed, and next to this is the reflection that his conduct is rightfully appreciated by his country and his superiors in command. The commanding general is happy to know that this meed of commendation was never more nobly earned or better deserved than by the soldiers of this division, and no greener laurels have been won in this great struggle by the hardy sons of the West than those of the Cavalry Division of the Army of the Mississippi.¹

In his dispatch to General Rosecrans—written on the field—Colonel Sheridan said:

I was attacked this morning by from eight to ten regiments of cavalry, under command of General Chalmers, and have driven them back. They attacked my advanced guard about two miles southwest of Booneville, on the Blackland road. I immediately supported it by one battalion of my own regiment, and then sent additional supports. I then directed Captain Alger, with two companies of the Second Iowa and two companies of my own regiment, to charge them in the rear—this was handsomely done—and at the same time Major Coon of the Second Iowa, with his battalion, to make a dash in front and on their left. This haltered the enemy very much and enabled me to hold them during the whole day. About 3:30 P. M. they commenced retreating. I regret that I am not able to follow them up. I sent for Mizner's Cavalry to Renzi; also for artillery support from General Asboth. They have not arrived. I have just written to General Asboth that I will not need infantry support. You had better be the judge. The enemy will not again attack me today, and probably have retreated finally. My command behaved handsomely. I regret the loss of some officers and men; I do not as yet know how many. The enemy have been badly injured. This force came from Tupelo and Saulto. I learn this, as well as their strength, from prisoners taken.²

In his official report, written the next day, Colonel Sheridan describes in detail the different movements of his command and those of the enemy during the engagement. He makes special mention of the gallantry and good conduct of Colonel Hatch, Majors Coon and Hepburn and Captains Gilbert and Queal of the Second Iowa. He also highly commends a number of officers of his own regiment, the Second Michigan, and gives equal credit to both organizations for the brave and gallant manner in which they obeyed his orders and won a glorious victory where defeat seemed inevitable. In his official report, Colonel Hatch, in addition to the names of officers mentioned by Colonel Sheridan, includes those of Captain Graves and Lieutenants Foster and Wright. The compiler has devoted a somewhat larger amount of space to this engagement than to those which preceded it, or than he will be able to devote to most of those which follow. He considers himself justified in doing so because of the fact that it marked an important epoch, not only in the history of the regiment but of the war. It was the formative period in the development of the military genius of the three officers who occupied the most conspicuous positions and who, at the close of the great War of the Rebellion, had won the greatest distinction.—Grant, Sherman and Sheridan, that great triumvirate of American military chieftains, who were not inspired or actuated by the motives of self aggrandizement that governed that other great triumvirate in the days of ancient Rome, but were animated by one common patriotic purpose and that alone—the salvation of the Republic.

Following closely upon the battle of Booneville came the promotion of Colonel Sheridan to the rank of Brigadier General and his transfer to a larger command in the Army of the Ohio. On the 9th of July the camp of the Second Iowa was moved to Rienzi, Miss. There the regiment remained in comparative quiet until the 26th of August, on which date a considerable force of rebel cavalry made a sudden dash upon the pickets of the regiment and captured six of them. Colonel Hatch immediately went in pursuit of the enemy, following them for twenty miles, and twice brought them to a brief stand, inflicting heavy damage upon them, taking eight prisoners and a quantity of arms and ammunition, which the enemy abandoned after making their last stand. The loss of the Second Iowa consisted of the six prisoners taken on the picket line, besides six others wounded in the subsequent engagements and a number of horses killed and disabled. The pursuit was abandoned late in the evening, the men and horses becoming exhausted on account of the excessive heat. Lieutenant Colonel Hatch calls particular attention to the operations of a detachment under the command of First Lieutenant Anton Scherer, of Company E, which pursued a portion of the enemy on the Ripley road for nine miles, keeping up a running fire and sometimes charging with the saber. Lieutenant Scherer only abandoned the pursuit upon being recalled by Colonel Hatch at dark.

On the 5th of September, 1862, the regiment broke camp at Rienzi and, from that date, was actively engaged in the campaign which ensued and lasted until the end of the year. The operations of the regiment in this campaign were so numerous that they cannot be here described, on account of limitation of space. Suffice it to say that the duties performed were arduous in the extreme. The officers and men were almost constantly in the saddle during the day and often far into the night, operating upon the flanks and in advance of the army, coming frequently into contact with small parties of the enemy, giving and receiving hard blows now and then, killing, wounding and capturing a few of the enemy here and there, and suffering like reverses in their turn. In the hard-fought battles of Iuka and Corinth the regiment performed important service but did not become closely engaged. They were always ready, however, to execute any orders they received, and the General commanding was kept advised of the movements of the enemy everywhere upon the field by the quickly moving detachments of cavalry, while upon the infantry and artillery devolved the heavy, continuous fighting which determined the fortune of battle in favor of the one and against the other of the contending armies. The great battle of Corinth, on the 3d and 4th days of October, and that which followed a day or two later on the Hatchie River, closed the fall campaign.

Another great campaign was now undertaken by General Grant, which had for its objective point the rebel stronghold at Vicksburg, Miss. The preliminary movements of this campaign, as well as most of the fighting during its progress, devolved upon the cavalry, and in these movements and conflicts the Second Iowa bore a conspicuous part. At this time Colonel Hatch was in command of the brigade to which his regiment was attached, and Lieutenant Colonel Hepburn was serving upon the staff of General Rosecrans, the command of the regiment devolving upon Major Datus E. Coon, an officer in every way well qualified and worthy of the honor thus bestowed. The regiment advanced from Corinth on November 2, 1862, and joined the cavalry division at Grand Junction on the 4th. On November 12th, the army began its march southward, the cavalry brigade, commanded by Colonel Hatch, taking the advance, the scouts keeping well out in front and on the flanks. The enemy's cavalry was alert and watchful and skirmishing occurred frequently. On several occasions the enemy was encountered in force and the losses on both sides were quite heavy. The most notable of these encounters were at Water Valley and Coffeeville. In the former of these Colonel Hatch was entirely successful, defeating the enemy, killing and wounding many and capturing 150, besides a large number of horses and mules. At Coffeeville, however, the rebel General Van Dorn made a determined stand with a large force of infantry, artillery and cavalry, and, after a short but hard-fought engagement, the Union cavalry found themselves too greatly outnumbered and were compelled to retreat. The loss of the Second Iowa in this encounter was 22 men, killed and wounded. In his official report of the operations of his brigade on the Mississippi Central Expedition, Colonel Hatch gives the full details of each movement and engagement. His description of the desperate situation in which the Second Iowa Cavalry was placed, at the junction of the Water Valley and Panola roads, and the splendid manner in which they fought to extricate themselves, the conspicuous gallantry of the four rifle companies, who were surrounded but refused to surrender and fought their way through the ranks of the enemy and had five out of seven officers wounded, is of special interest. In closing his report he says: "Of the officers and soldiers of my command I cannot speak too highly, especially of the officers and soldiers of the Second Iowa Cavalry, who, when the enemy was advancing upon them from the front and either flank, conducted themselves like veterans, pouring volley after volley into the advancing columns." The Colonel makes special mention of the gallantry of Majors Coon and Kendrick and Lieutenant Belden.¹⁰ Van Dorn now concentrated all his available cavalry and executed a bold and brilliant movement. Passing entirely around General Grant's army, he suddenly appeared before Holly Springs, where an immense quantity of supplies and military stores had been accumulated, guarded by a force of infantry, cavalry and artillery, deemed amply sufficient for defense against any ordinary force of the enemy that might have been reasonably supposed to be available to be brought against them. Even with the superior force with which Van Dorn made the attack, the forces guarding the place might have held out until they could have been reinforced, but for the incompetency of the officer in command, who was subsequently dismissed from the service for having surrendered himself and the greater portion of his command, after making but a feeble resistance.

¹⁰War of the Rebellion Official Records, Series 1, Vol. 17, Part 1, page 501. Report of Colonel Edward Hatch, Brigade Commander.

The following extract from General Grant's order of dismissal of the unfaithful officer shows his appreciation of the gallant conduct of the officers and men who refused to surrender and cut their way out through the enemy's lines:

. . . . It is gratifying to notice, in contrast with this, the conduct of a portion of the command; conspicuous among whom was the Second Illinois Cavalry, who gallantly and successfully resisted being taken prisoners. Their loss was heavy, but the enemy's was much greater. Such conduct as theirs will always insure success. Had the commandant of the post exercised the usual and ordinary precautions for defense, the garrison was sufficiently strong to have repulsed the enemy, saved our stores from destruction and themselves from capture.¹¹

The destruction of his supplies compelled General Grant to abandon the expedition, which, up to that time, had promised such satisfactory results, and to at once begin a retreat towards his main base of supplies at Memphis. This retreat was fraught with great suffering, the men and animals being reduced almost to the point of starvation before the wagon trains, sent from Memphis and La Grange, under heavy escort, could reach them with the much needed supplies. The compiler has a vivid personal recollection of the pangs of hunger which he and his comrades endured on that dreadful march.

The regiment with its brigade and division had accomplished much, up to the time the campaign was brought to such an abrupt termination. In their many encounters they had inflicted heavy damage upon the enemy, not only in killed and wounded, but had captured many prisoners, horses and mules, besides destroying much property of great value to the enemy. When the retrograde march began, they constituted the rear guard of the army, which was again the post of honor, involving the same constant vigilance and arduous service which was required in leading the advance. In addition to the duty of guarding the rear of the army against the near approach of the enemy, the cavalry division performed another very important service—that of rendering the railroad useless to the enemy after they had regained possession of it. At length, on the 28th of December, the regiment reached La Grange, Tenn., where it went into camp and enjoyed a season of comparative rest for the remainder of the winter. Detachments were occasionally sent out in pursuit of roving bands of the enemy, and for the purpose of guarding forage trains, but, beyond a few encounters with the enemy by these detachments, the regiment was not called upon for any movement in which all its officers and men were to participate until the commencement of active operations by the entire army in the early spring of 1863.

On the 10th of March, 1863, Colonel Hatch, with his regiment, left camp at La Grange, and by a rapid march proceeded to Waterford, Miss., and, in obedience to orders, burned the railroad bridge which spanned the Tallahatchie River near that point, and also destroyed a quantity of supplies for the rebel army which he found there. He then by a skillful movement avoided coming into contact with a superior force which had been sent against him, and returned to his camp at La Grange, the men and officers of the regiment having been almost constantly in the saddle for three days and two nights. The regiment, either as a whole or in detachments, was actively engaged during the remainder of March and the first half of April in active operations against the enemy, preventing concentration of the rebel forces, and, in the various minor engagements which ensued, capturing a considerable number of prisoners, horses and other property; but, while inflicting these damages upon the rebels, the regiment sustained—only in less degree—the inevitable casualties which such operations involved.

¹¹War of the Rebellion Official Records, Series 1, Vol. 17, Part 1, pages 515 and 516.

On the 17th of April, 1863, the Second Iowa Cavalry, then comprising a part of the cavalry brigade under the command of the intrepid Colonel Grierson, again left its camp at La Grange and started upon what proved to be one of the most remarkable cavalry expeditions of the war. On the second day out, in obedience to orders from Colonel Grierson, Colonel Hatch led the Second Iowa against a force of the enemy which threatened to delay the advance of the main column. In his official report of the engagement which ensued, Colonel Hatch clearly demonstrates the fact that, by his thus having distracted the attention of the enemy and held it for thirty-six hours, he enabled Colonel Grierson to get so far beyond the main force of rebels that he could not be overtaken, thus enabling that gallant officer to make a complete success of his expedition. The enemy had mistaken the Second Iowa Cavalry, under Colonel Hatch, for the main force, and the skill with which that delusion was effected, together with the tremendous risk and hazard to which his relatively small command was exposed, is graphically described in the official report of Colonel Hatch, in which he gives the details of his encounter with the superior force of the enemy at the town of Palo Alto.¹² In this desperate encounter one company of the Second Cavalry was separated from the regiment, but, although completely surrounded, refused to surrender and was subsequently released from its perilous situation by an impetuous charge, led by Colonel Hatch, in which the ranks of the enemy were broken. After making that gallant charge and rescuing the company, the regiment slowly retreated, fighting by the rear, the enemy constantly following, until, four days later, the pursuit was abandoned and the regiment joined the other Union troops at its old camp near La Grange. The losses of the enemy greatly exceeded those sustained by the regiment on the retreat. Colonel Hatch having availed himself of every advantage of position to keep his men as well covered as possible, and, fighting always on the defensive, with repeating arms, was able to overcome the disparity of numbers. The regiment had, however, expended nearly all its ammunition at the time the enemy drew off from the pursuit. The General commanding accorded to Colonel Hatch and his regiment the credit of having made possible the success of Colonel Grierson's great cavalry raid, which terminated at Baton Rouge on May 2d, with such important results. The conclusion of his official report, written before it was known that Colonel Grierson had safely reached his destination, plainly indicates that Colonel Hatch fully appreciated the importance of having diverted the attention of the enemy from the main object of the expedition. He says: "The fight at Palo Alto, diverting the enemy from Colonel Grierson, has undoubtedly given him thirty-six hours start."

The compiler is admonished that more than half the space he can devote to this historical sketch has already been exhausted; he will, therefore, be compelled to condense even more closely the account of the operations of the regiment for the remainder of its period of service. Reference to official reports for details must, therefore, be more frequently made than in the preceding pages.

Soon after his return to La Grange, Colonel Hatch was placed in command of a brigade, and the command of the regiment again devolved upon Major Coon. This command marched southward to Okolona without meeting with much opposition, the object of the expedition being mainly the capture of horses and mules for the use of the cavalry and the transportation trains of the army. In this it was very successful, returning on the 5th of May with over 300 animals and, a few days later, making a raid extending eighty miles in another direction, with similar results. On the latter expedition the brigade encountered a rebel force under its old antagonist, General Chalmers, who, after a brief engagement, was defeated with a much greater loss than that sustained by the brigade. From about the middle of May until the 23d of August, 1863, the headquarters of the regiment and brigade were at La Grange, but during that time the regiment, either as a whole or by detachments, engaged in a number of important operations, which may be summarized as follows: The raid southwest from La Grange to Panola, a distance of one hundred miles, which was made for the purpose of retaliation for the firing upon and destruction of federal transports on the Mississippi River and the killing, in at least one instance, of women and children. The reprisals were heavy. In the vicinity where the depredations had been committed, much property was destroyed, and 1,000 horses and mules were captured and brought back to the camp at La Grange. The next expedition was directed against the cavalry command of the rebel General Forrest, which at that time occupied the town of Jackson, Tenn. Colonel Hatch marched with his brigade against this force on the 12th of July. In the engagement which ensued the Second Iowa was conspicuous for its gallantry, under its capable leader, Major Coon.¹³ Among the casualties in this engagement was Lieutenant John K. Humphrey of the Second Iowa, severely wounded. In his official report of this engagement¹⁴ Colonel Hatch gives the loss of the enemy as follows: 4 Captains, 3 Lieutenants and 31 men killed, and not less than 150 wounded, while the total loss in his own command was but 16. The superior quality of the arms of his men, and the fact that the heavy loss upon the enemy was inflicted while they were in full retreat, accounts for the great disparity in the casualties. On the 13th of August, Major Coon, with two hundred men of the Second Iowa Cavalry and detachments from other regiments of the brigade, making in all a force of five hundred men, well mounted and equipped, started from La Grange under orders from Colonel Hatch to proceed south to Grenada, Miss., and destroy a large amount of railroad rolling stock and other property which the rebel government had accumulated at that point for the use of its army. The object of the expedition was successfully accomplished. The property destroyed consisted of two large depots, sixty locomotives, five hundred cars, machine shops and flouring mills, and a large number of army wagons. This was a serious loss to the rebel army and went far towards counteracting the effect of the rebel General Van Dorn's raid upon Holly Springs and his destruction of the supplies for the Union army at that place. Major Coon returned with his detachment to La Grange August 23d, after an absence of eleven days.

The regiment with its brigade now marched to the city of Memphis, where it went into camp August 27, 1863, remaining there until November 1st, on which date, under command of Lieutenant Colonel Hepburn, it marched to Collierville to reinforce the troops at that place. The rebel General Chalmers was then approaching Collierville with a large force and the regiment was just in time to aid in repelling his attack. After a hard-fought engagement the enemy was driven from the field. They succeeded in carrying off most of their wounded, but left their dead, forty-one in number, and fifty captured, among whom were one Brigadier General and eight others who were commissioned officers. The loss on the Union side in this engagement was thirty-seven. Among the wounded was Captain Charles C. Horton, of the Second Iowa Cavalry. Upon its return from the pursuit of the enemy the regiment went into camp at Collierville, remaining there until November 26, 1863, on which date it marched to Covington, in West Tennessee, and, upon arriving there, went into camp. From this point scouting parties were sent out to watch the movements of a large force of the enemy under the command of the noted rebel General S. D. Lee, which was reported to be advancing from Oxford. On the 1st of December Colonel Hatch moved from Covington with his brigade and, marching rapidly, reached Moscow, on the Memphis and Charleston Railroad, just in time to reinforce the small garrison at that place and to repulse the enemy under General Lee, after a hard-fought engagement, in which Colonel Hatch was very severely wounded, the ball passing through his right lung and entirely through his body. He refused to leave the field, however, and continued to direct the movements of his troops until the enemy had been defeated and were in full retreat, leaving sixty of their number dead upon the field, but succeeding in removing their wounded. The loss in Colonel Hatch's command was eighty-one—killed, wounded and missing. The regiment now returned to its former camp at Collierville.

On December 22, 1863, the regiment, with Captain Graves in command, (Major Coon having succeeded Colonel Hatch in command of the brigade,) left its camp and, with all the cavalry which could be hastily concentrated for that purpose, went in pursuit of the noted rebel General Forrest, who, with about 3,000 men, had again boldly invaded Tennessee and was engaged in enforcing a merciless conscription of troops for the rebel army. Notwithstanding the activity of the pursuit, the daring rebel leader succeeded in getting safely out of the State with a very large number of unarmed conscripts, who were subsequently armed and assigned to the depleted ranks of regiments in the rebel army. Returning from the pursuit of Forrest, the regiment reached its encampment at Collierville December 31, 1863.

On January 2, 1864, the regiment left its camp at Collierville and started for Memphis, where it arrived on the 4th and went into camp. The men suffered greatly at this time, both upon the march and in camp, the weather being extremely cold for that latitude. A large number of recruits joined the regiment and were mustered into the service at Memphis, making its aggregate strength greater than it had been at any time since the fall of 1862. During the remainder of the month the recruits were drilled and instructed in the duties of the cavalry soldier and became quite proficient before the regiment again took the field, but they had yet to learn their most important lessons and the stern realities of the soldier's life in time of war. The officers and men of the regiment felt a just pride in the splendid record of their gallant Colonel, who was now separated from them on account of his severe wound. They also entertained the highest regard for General Grierson, who had demonstrated his great ability as a cavalry leader. The warmest feeling of personal friendship existed between these two officers. It was through the strong personal endorsement of General Grierson that the too long delayed promotion of Colonel Hatch was finally secured, and it is deemed proper and fitting to here insert the evidence of appreciation shown by the General in his letter to the Secretary of War.

I consider his promotion not only due to himself but to the best interests of the service. He is now slowly recovering from a wound through his lungs, received in a recent engagement at Moscow, Tenn.

B. H. GRIERSON, Brigadier General,

Commanding Cavalry Division,

Sixteenth Army Corps.¹⁶

On the 5th of February, 1864, the regiment again broke camp and marched to Germantown, where a large force of cavalry, under command of Generals W. S. Smith and B. H. Grierson, had been concentrated for the purpose of co-operating with General William T. Sherman, who had then just started from Vicksburg on his famous Meridian Expedition. This cavalry force was under orders to join Sherman at Meridian. The rebel General Forrest had again succeeded in getting together a large force of cavalry and, by a series of skillful maneuvers and well-planned attacks, managed to delay the advance of the Union cavalry until General Sherman—who had waited for some time at Meridian for this cavalry force to join him—had started and was well on his way towards Vicksburg. This enabled Forrest to receive reinforcements from the rebel cavalry, which had ineffectually opposed Sherman's advance, and it at once became necessary for Smith and Grierson to retreat to Germantown or Memphis. The movements and engagements of this cavalry division, both upon the advance and retreat, are well described in the "History of the Second Iowa Cavalry," published soon after the close of the war, when all the events, so graphically narrated, were fresh in the mind of the writer, and which are found to be in substantial accord with the official reports.¹⁷

After giving an account of the advance movement and the engagement in which the Second Iowa was most conspicuous, and in which Lieutenant H. C. Dwire was killed, and Major Coon, Captains Graves, Queal and Horton and Lieutenant Bandy displayed great gallantry in directing the charge against the enemy, (the engagement ending with the defeat of the rebels and the capture of West Point,) he proceeds to describe the retrograde movement. At the beginning of the retreat, Major Coon was directed to take the Second Iowa and a battalion of the Sixth Illinois and hold the enemy in check until the large transportation train could get safely under way. The rebel General Forrest made a desperate attack upon this rear guard for the purpose of capturing the train. Instead of falling back before this force, Major Coon requested the brigade commander, Lieutenant Colonel Hepburn, of his own regiment, to allow him to make a standing fight and to send him reinforcements. Hepburn's reply to this appeal was that the orders of General Smith must be obeyed, and the retreat continued. There was nothing left but for the rear guard to continue to slowly retire, protecting both its front and flanks, as best it could, against the persistent attacks of the enemy. The battalions, under the command of Captains Queal and Horton, dismounted and fought from behind trees with their Colt's revolving rifles, which inflicted very heavy damage upon the enemy. Finally the commanding General, realizing the desperate situation in which his rear guard was placed, sent back a brigade to their support. While these fresh troops at once engaged the enemy at the front, Major Coon's command was temporarily held in reserve, but still constituted a portion of the rear guard. The Second Iowa had left fifty of its brave men upon the field, the heaviest loss it had ever sustained in any engagement up to that time. The fight did not terminate until 10 o'clock P. M., and the retreat continued until 2 o'clock A. M., when the troops were allowed a brief rest, the retreat being resumed at daylight. General Smith, being very ill, now relinquished the command to General Grierson, and that officer, by the exercise of great skill and energy, conducted the retreat to Germantown. The day he assumed command the situation looked very desperate. Forrest repeatedly renewed his attacks on the rear and flanks of the retreating army, captured part of its artillery and, at one time, threatened the capture of the entire command. It was only by the most determined bravery and persistent fighting that Grierson finally arrived within reach of infantry reinforcements, and the daring rebel leader abandoned the pursuit. The officers and men of the Second Iowa Cavalry were almost constantly in the saddle for sixty hours and, for the greater part of that time, engaged in action. Upon reaching Germantown both men and horses had reached the point of extreme exhaustion. The regiment arrived at its camp on the 26th of February, having been absent on the expedition sixteen days.

After resting a short time, the regiment marched to Memphis and went into camp there. Major Coon and General Grierson now made a special effort to induce the men to re-enlist for another term of three years, or during the war. These officers were very popular with the regiment, and their efforts resulted in the re-enlistment of a sufficient number of men to entitle the regiment to the designation of a veteran organization. The re-enlisted men were again mustered into the service on the 28th of March, 1864, and, from that date, the regiment had the new title of Second Iowa Veteran Cavalry Volunteers. The aggregate strength of the regiment at this time was 1,088, of which number 45 were commissioned officers, 360 re-enlisted veterans, and 683 non-veterans and recruits. The re-enlisted men were granted a furlough of thirty days, to begin from the time they arrived at Davenport, Iowa. They embarked on steamer at Memphis, April 7, 1864. Upon reaching Davenport they were accorded an enthusiastic reception. They then received their furloughs and departed for their respective homes. On the 15th of May they reassembled at Davenport and, on the 17th, departed for St. Louis. In the meantime Colonel Hatch had been promoted to Brigadier General, Major Coon succeeding him as Colonel of the regiment and Captains Horton, Schnitger and Moore had become Battalion Majors. At St. Louis the veterans were supplied with horses and then proceeded to Memphis, where they arrived on the 29th of May and rejoined the non-veterans and recruits, who had, in the meantime, been performing garrison duty at Fort Pickering, under command of Lieutenant Colonel Hepburn. Here the regiment was supplied with the latest improved arms, Spencers' seven-shooting carbines, at that time considered the most effective cavalry arm in the service.

Another active and aggressive campaign was now about to begin. The rebel General Forrest had captured Fort Pillow and won a victory over the troops commanded by General Sturgis. Emboldened by these successes, Forrest had established his headquarters at Tupelo, Miss., where he was daily augmenting his forces and bidding defiance to any force that might be sent against him. General A. J. Smith was ordered to Memphis to take command of the Union forces there and to proceed against Forrest. The Second Iowa Cavalry now belonged to the cavalry division commanded by General B. H. Grierson, its own Colonel, D. E. Coon, being in command of the brigade to which his regiment was attached, while the regiment was under the command of Major C. C. Horton, whose series of admirable official reports describe with great particularity of detail all the movements and operations of the regiment from the day he became its commander to the close of the year 1864.¹⁵ Appended to these reports are the lists of casualties sustained during the period embraced, showing how the regiment had fought and suffered during the campaign. The principal engagements in which the regiment took part, and included in Major Horton's reports, are here given in the order in which they occurred: Tupelo, Miss., Ripley, Miss., Pontotoc, Miss., Oxford, Miss., Hurricane Creek, Miss., Shoal Creek, Ala., Aberdeen, Ala., Butler Creek, Ala., Lawrenceburg, Tenn., Campbellville, Tenn., Linville, Tenn., Mount Carmel, Tenn., and near Franklin, Tenn. In addition to these engagements there were many skirmishes by detachments and individual encounters with the enemy by the scouts. During the greater part of this time the former Colonel of the regiment—General Hatch—was in command of the cavalry division to which the regiment and its brigade belonged. This was a matter of mutual satisfaction to the General and to the officers and men of his old regiment. They were renewing the contest with their old enemy, the rebel General Forrest and his forces, with whom they had so often met in conflict before. These two Generals had learned each other's methods of attack and defense, and, in the dreadful game of war in which they were engaged, it became a question of skill and ability on the part of these great cavalry leaders as to which should gain the advantage. In so far as the element of bravery and daring of the leaders and their followers was concerned, it may be said that the one equaled the other. They were all American soldiers, and, as a rule, displayed the same courage on the battlefield. Major Horton makes special mention of the following officers of his regiment during the campaign,—Battalion Majors Schnitger and Moore, Captains Stiles, Bandy, Goodrich and Foster, Lieutenants Watson, Rimple, Budd and Griffith. While the Major especially commended these officers for gallantry and coolness in action, he also commends all the officers and men of his regiment, and states that he finds it hard to mention the conspicuous acts of bravery of some without doing injustice to others. The distance marched on this campaign was nearly 600 miles. The loss of the regiment, from September 30, 1864 to January 1, 1865, was 12 killed, 3 mortally wounded, 44 wounded and 8 captured by the enemy. Two of the men captured were severely wounded before they surrendered. Two others, who were captured, escaped and returned to the regiment on the 28th of December, 1864, leaving the net loss of the regiment 65. The loss of the cavalry division during the same period was 600, that of the Second Iowa being considerably above the average.

On December 2, 1864, the regiment, with its brigade and division, fell back to Nashville, crossed the Cumberland River and went into camp at Edgefield, to which place the tents and knapsacks had been forwarded. The men were very glad to again have these equipments, having been deprived of them since leaving their camp at White's Station in September. In the meantime they had bivouacked in the open field, with no protection save that afforded by the army blanket. The weather had now become intensely cold and the men suffered very greatly. It was evident that another desperate struggle was now impending and could not long be delayed. The opposing armies of Generals Thomas and Hood were constantly employed in fortifying the positions they occupied, that of Thomas being along a chain of hills encircling the city of Nashville, and that of Hood along another chain of hills from one to four miles distant from that city. General Thomas, after making every preparation to meet the threatened attack, finally determined to assume the offensive, and made the necessary disposition of his troops for the purpose of assaulting the enemy along the entire line of his works. The cavalry division, commanded by General Hatch, was ordered to recross the Cumberland River on the 12th of December, and was assigned to a position on the right of General A. J. Smith's Corps. Everything being in readiness, the advance was ordered on the morning of December 15, 1864, and the result of the tremendous struggle which ensued went far towards the complete overthrow of the so-called Confederate Government and the restoration of peace. It was the greatest battle in which the Second Iowa Cavalry participated and the one in which the regiment won its highest honors. In this battle Colonel Coon commanded the brigade, while Lieutenant Colonel Horton (recently promoted from Major) commanded the regiment, assisted by Major Schnitger and Captains Foster and Bandy, his Battalion commanders. The compiler of this sketch feels that he is justified in trespassing somewhat on the limits assigned him, in quoting from the official report of Lieutenant Colonel Horton, to such an extent at least as to show the most conspicuous features of the service performed by his regiment in this great battle. It will be noted that the regiment fought mainly dismounted on the first day and part of the second day of the battle.

HEADQUARTERS SECOND IOWA CAVALRY, VETERAN VOLUNTEERS,
GRAVELLY SPRINGS, Jan. 2, 1865.

GENERAL: I have the honor to make the following report of the operations of the Second Iowa Cavalry since the 15th of December, 1864, embracing the two days' battle near Nashville, and the subsequent pursuit of the rebel General Hood. In obedience to orders from brigade headquarters, moved from camp on the morning of the 15th of December, 1864, at eight o'clock, men dismounted and horses following in the rear. After marching one mile, our brigade—the Second of the Fifth Division, Cavalry Corps—took position on the right of General A. J. Smith's Corps of Infantry, the Sixth and Ninth Illinois Cavalry on my left, the Seventh Illinois Cavalry on my right. Complying with the movements of the commands, my left moved forward, swinging the while to the left, the enemy's skirmish line falling back steadily before our advance. Their main line was found some four miles from town, occupying formidable works on a commanding hill. By continually swinging to the left our brigade struck their left flank. The division battery ("I" of the Second Illinois) now galloped into position in an open field and opened on the works, evidently much to their annoyance, as the guns of both forts were immediately turned upon the battery and my regiment, which had been formed to the left and rear as support. Remained lying in this position, exposed to a galling fire from both forts for nearly an hour, losing two men killed and one wounded, when I received orders to move forward and join in an assault upon the first fort. The regiment moved steadily forward under a severe fire until within three hundred yards of the works, when the order to "Charge and take that fort!" from General Hatch rang along the line. With a shout the men sprang forward, and with a shout the fort was carried. Company G, Lieutenant Budd commanding, having been thrown out as skirmishers, were nearest the works, and consequently the first to enter. One man was knocked down by a blow from a musket just as he was scaling the works. One of General Smith's batteries shelled the fort after it was captured, six shells bursting in and over it after we had entered. Captured here four brass Napoleons and sixty prisoners. Thirty killed and wounded rebels were found lying in the fort. Leaving a guard with the guns, I pressed forward after the retreating enemy, capturing many prisoners. Orders were now received from Colonel Coon to move by the right flank and charge the second fort, situated some seven hundred yards to our right on a conical hill. The men were so eager in the pursuit of the fugitives from the first fort that I was able to rally only two hundred of them; with these I joined the brigade in the assault. The fort was defended with a stubbornness and gallantry seldom surpassed—the enemy only ceasing to use their artillery after the works were scaled. A short but desperate hand-to-hand struggle ensued after the works were entered. My colors, borne by the gallant Sergeant Hartman, Company F, were the first to float from the fort. The Sergeant fell mortally wounded while in the act of planting the colors on one of the guns. Seizing my hand as I bent over him, he exclaimed, "Major, tell my friends I died doing my duty." In this fort were captured two guns, with caissons; one battery wagon, and nearly one hundred prisoners. Notwithstanding my colors were the first to enter the works, it would be unjust to claim the guns or prisoners as my particular prize, as the different regiments of the brigade entered so nearly at the same time. Lieutenants Watson and Griffith, Companies I and D, who, not having heard the order to rally in time to join in the assault on the fort, moved by the right and charged on our left flank, attacking and repulsing a force of rebels who were endeavoring to re-enforce the fort, now reported with some sixty prisoners each. Quartermaster Sergeant Beeson, with my bugler, Anderson, and two mounted orderlies (Truesdale and Winn) charged with the saber, killing and wounding several and taking some seventy prisoners. Number of prisoners captured during the day, two hundred and fifty. Regiment lost, while supporting the battery and charging the two forts, six men killed, and two commissioned officers and eighteen men wounded. . . . Moved again at daylight. . . . Found the enemy in strong force, occupying a line of hills on "Little Harpeth," four miles south of Franklin. General Hatch moved his division to the front, formed on the right of General Hammond. Second Iowa on the extreme right. The line moved at a walk for some three hundred yards, then the trot, and finally the charge was sounded. At the signal, all sprang forward; but the center found it impossible to carry the position on account of the steep and rocky hill-side. They halted here, dismounted, and engaged the enemy on foot. Not receiving the order to halt, and having better ground in front, I pressed forward, charged up the hill and through a thick wood, until we reached the enemy's left and rear, who now opened on me with grape and canister from the batteries. Wheeling the regiment to the left, I ordered the charge upon the battery to our left, but the horses were poor and so much blown that they could only raise a slow trot, perceiving which, the enemy charged us in turn, but were handsomely repulsed with the carbines.

A strong force of rebels were now reported passing through the gap between my regiment and the balance of the brigade. The fact that the day was dark and rainy, and that they wore rubber ponchos, and were many of them dressed in blue, had led my men to believe them to be our own troops, so they were nearly in the rear of the Third Battalion before the mistake was discovered. Company K, Sergeant John Coulter commanding, were nearly surrounded, and were compelled to cut their way out with the saber. Sergeant Coulter, with Corporal Heck and privates Black and Anderson (same company), charged the rebel color guard, and, after a desperate hand-to-hand struggle, in which Heck and Black were killed, and Coulter and Anderson badly wounded, the colors of Rosse's Brigade were captured and borne triumphantly off by the Sergeant. Eight dead rebels, lying within the space of a few yards, attest the desperate nature of the conflict. After a few moments' close fighting, in which the saber and butts of guns were freely used, the rebels fell back. The regiment being somewhat disorganized, I withdrew from the range of the artillery to reform and communicate with the brigade. Although I found the enemy too strong to drive, I held my ground and finally compelled them to vacate their position on the hill. General Hatch now pressed them on the pike, capturing three pieces of artillery. My loss during the engagement was seven killed, eight wounded and thirteen captured. Several others were captured, but made their escape, in some instances returning with their guards as prisoners. Regiment captured in all some fifty prisoners. . . . Of the conduct of the officers and men, I can only speak in terms of highest commendation. Where every soldier (officers and men) deserves special mention, it is hard to discriminate. I will only make special mention of Lieutenant Sydenham, Regimental Adjutant, and my battalion commanders, Major Schnitger and Captains Foster and Bandy, to whom I am greatly indebted for the efficient, prompt and gallant manner in which all my orders were executed. Appended is the loss sustained by the regiment during the campaign, sixteen killed, four officers and twenty-nine men wounded; thirteen prisoners.

I am, Sir,

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

CHARLES C. HORTON,

Lieutenant Colonel Second Iowa Cavalry,

Commanding Regiment.¹⁹

TO GEN. N. B. BAKER,
Adjutant General of Iowa.

¹⁹Report of Adjutant General of Iowa, 1865, Vol. 2, pages 937 to 940 inclusive.

That portion of Lieutenant Colonel Horton's report which has been omitted describes in detail the operations of the regiment while in pursuit of General Hood's army, and embraces the dates from December 17th to 26th, inclusive.

On December 27th a detachment of five hundred of the most effective men and horses in the brigade, of which two hundred were chosen from the Second Iowa, was ordered to proceed in advance of the cavalry division and follow Hood's retreating army to the Tennessee River. This detachment pressed so closely upon the enemy's rear guard as to compel the abandonment of a large number of ambulances and wagons. Captain Bandy and Lieutenant Hamilton, with fifty men of the Second Iowa, gave the parting shots that hastened the retreat of the last of the enemy across the river on the evening of December 28, 1864. The regiment had thus been conspicuous in all the operations against Hood's army from the commencement of the battle of Nashville until that army was almost destroyed and all that remained of it was in full retreat. Among all the splendid regiments which composed the cavalry division commanded by that prince among leaders, General Edward Hatch, there was none which gained greater honor and distinction than the Second Iowa Cavalry. The Second Brigade of the division to which the regiment belonged, and which was commanded by its own Colonel²⁾ during the entire campaign, had to its credit the capture of one General, two Majors, two Captains, six Lieutenants and 1,175 enlisted men of the rebel army, also 4 stands of colors, 1,315 muskets, 15 pieces of artillery, 21 wagons and 7 ambulances.

The regiment, with its brigade and division, upon returning from the pursuit of Hood's army, arrived at Eastport, Miss., January 11, 1865, and went into winter quarters at that place.

On the 19th of February, Major Schnitger, with four hundred men from the Second Iowa and Ninth Illinois Cavalry, conducted a successful expedition against a force of cavalry under command of the rebel General Roddy, returning to camp with a large number of prisoners, most of whom were found hiding in the woods, they having deserted the rebel commander, who continued to retreat with the remainder of his force and made good his escape. During the remainder of the winter the regiment was not called upon for active duty, as the war was practically ended. During the spring and summer of 1865, the operations of the regiment extended over a considerable territory in the northern sections of Alabama and Mississippi, but these operations were more in the nature of a pacific than hostile character, the real necessity for the retention of troops in the Southern States during this period being for the purpose of maintaining order, and assisting in the readjustment of the functions of civil government.

Upon the disbandment of the brigade which he had so long commanded, Colonel Coon issued the following order:

HEADQUARTERS SECOND BRIGADE, FIFTH DIVISION, C. C. M. D. M.

DECATUR, ALA., July 7, 1865.

(General Order No. 11)

Veteran Companions: This day the identity of the old Second Brigade is lost, and its unflinching battle line, that covered our retiring forces at West Point and Prairie Station, that saved a disorganized command at Okolona, that raised the well earned cry of victory at Hurricane Creek and Tupelo, that presented its unbroken front to Hood's advancing hosts at Shoal Creek, Mt. Carmel, Linville, Lawrenceburg Pike and Franklin, and that taught the world a new lesson in cavalry warfare when it waved its victorious battle flag on the captured redoubts before Nashville; that unwavering battle scarred line has at last by order of your Department Commander been broken, and in parting I feel proud in giving expression to the heartfelt God speed and sincere well wishes mutually exchanged by the officers and men of the brigade. You have endured storms, hunger, fatigue and disaster and enjoyed sunshine and plenty, and many a victorious march together. Under each other's faithful watch, you have slept without fear in many a dangerous bivouac. Shoulder to shoulder you have stood the battle tide of many a sanguinary field, and the greatest good I can wish for you is that your future happiness and prosperity may be as great and unremitting as your past patriotism, fidelity and courage, while better cause for honest pride I shall never have than this: I once commanded the Second Brigade.

Officers, Soldiers and Comrades, Farewell.

By order of

DATUS E. COON,
Brevet Brigadier General.

JOHN H. AVERY,
Capt. and A. A. A. G.²

It should be here stated that, as their original terms of service had expired, those who had not re-enlisted had been mustered out of the service and returned to their homes. Those men had, by virtue of their three years' faithful service, become veterans in fact though not in name, the title having been officially bestowed upon their comrades who chose to remain until the close of the war. No criticism could, however, be justly made upon the action of those men who had honorably fulfilled the obligation they had taken upon themselves at the beginning of the war, and they returned to their homes with the highest regard of their comrades who remained.

Early in the month of September, the Veteran Second Iowa Cavalry was ordered to proceed to Selma, Ala., at which place, on the 19th day of September, 1865, it was mustered out of the service of the United States. It was then provided with transportation to Davenport, Iowa, and, upon arriving there, was disbanded, and the officers and men returned to their respective homes.

Major General A. J. Smith, in concluding his farewell address to the troops he had so long commanded, used the following words of praise and admonition: "Your military history is without blot or stain. With this record of your service you can return to your respective homes, with the consciousness that you have performed your full duty, won the respect and admiration of your commanders, and well deserved the confidence and trust of the country that in her hour of danger placed you in ranks and trusted to you her battles. Still continue to merit that confidence and trust, by becoming as good citizens as you have been soldiers. Remember that for a Republican government the main requisite is enlightened, moral and industrious citizens. Unless you become such the results of your entire service are lost to you. Let the memory of what you have endured endear to you every foot of American soil. Having asserted the supremacy of the General Government in arms, assist, now, in creating for it a glorious future among nations."

The survivors of the Second Iowa Cavalry have, as citizens, as faithfully observed this parting injunction of their old commander as they obeyed his orders when fighting for the preservation of a united country. Let those who come after them cherish their memory and emulate their patriotic example in time of peace, and, if need be, in war.

Third Regiment

Iowa Volunteer Cavalry

HISTORICAL SKETCH

THIRD REGIMENT IOWA VOLUNTEER CAVALRY

The Third Regiment of Iowa Cavalry was organized under the proclamation of President Lincoln dated July 23, 1861. The preliminary organization of the twelve companies, which were subsequently assigned to the regiment, had been under the charge of Hon. Cyrus Bussey, acting as Aide-de-Camp to Governor Samuel J. Kirkwood, and, under the direction of that energetic and capable officer, several of these partially organized companies had performed very efficient service in protecting the southern border of the State of Iowa from invasion by rebel forces from the State of Missouri. Upon the completion of their organization, the twelve companies were ordered to rendezvous at Keokuk, Iowa, and arrived at that place on dates ranging from August 3 to September 13, 1861. They were there mustered into the service of the United States by Captain Charles C. Smith and Lieutenant Ira K. Knox, of the United States Army, between the dates August 30 and September 14, 1861. When the muster was completed, the rolls showed an aggregate strength of 1,096 men, rank and file.¹ Cyrus Bussey was appointed and commissioned Colonel of the regiment August 10, 1861.

Among the files in the office of the Adjutant General of Iowa are several letters describing in detail the events connected with the attempted rebel invasion of the State in the summer of 1861. These letters were addressed to Governor Kirkwood by Hon. Cyrus Bussey, then acting as Aide-de-Camp to the Governor, and show the methods adopted to meet the threatened invasion. Colonel Bussey had gone to St. Louis and asked General Fremont to give him an order for arms and ammunition with which to equip the militia companies in that part of the State. There seemed to be a plentiful supply of ammunition, but arms could not at that time be procured as fast as they were needed. Colonel Bussey succeeded in getting 50,000 rounds of ammunition shipped to Keokuk, with the assurance that the guns would be shipped as soon as they could be procured. A day or two later a freight train arrived in Keokuk with 1,000 guns, consigned to Colonel G. M. Dodge, at Council Bluffs. Colonel Dodge had gone to Washington and succeeded in procuring these arms for his regiment, the Fourth Iowa Infantry, then in rendezvous at Council Bluffs. Colonel Bussey, without waiting for instructions, took possession of the guns and distributed them to the troops at Keokuk, and they at once marched across the border, reinforced the small body of troops, under Colonel Moore, who were bravely resisting the advance of the invaders, and won a signal victory over them. In his letter reporting his action to the Governor, Colonel Bussey says: "I am aware that I had no authority over United States arms, in transit to arm United States troops, but, without these guns and the ammunition I had procured, Green could have captured Keokuk and destroyed much property. It was fortunate that the ammunition I had procured at St. Louis was the right caliber to fit the guns." The bold, prompt and energetic action of Colonel Bussey, in that crisis, marked him for the successful leader of men and great enterprises which he afterwards became, and made him worthy of the high honor which came to him at the close of the war, when he was promoted to the rank of Brevet Major General of Volunteers. The regiment was very fortunate in the selection of Colonel Bussey as its commander. While he had not received a military education, he was a very able man, possessing in a high degree the requisite qualifications of a leader of men. He secured the confidence and respect of his officers and men from the day he took command of the regiment. The dates of appointment and commission of the other field, staff and line officers, together with their record and that of every non-commissioned officer and enlisted man in the regiment, from the commencement to the close of its service, will be found in the subjoined roster. The roster has been carefully transcribed from the official records, supplemented by such other information as it was possible to obtain from reliable sources, and the compiler hopes that it will, in the main, be found correct.

In the following pages, the compiler has endeavored to condense the history of the regiment into a description of the most conspicuous features of its service. With the wealth of material at his command, included in the official reports extending over the long period of its service, it would have been a much less arduous task to have written an extended history than to condense it into the narrow limits rendered necessary by the magnitude of the work and the giving to each organization an approximately equal amount of space.

On the 4th of November, 1861, the regiment was ordered to proceed to Benton Barracks, near St. Louis, Mo., where it arrived on the 6th. Before leaving the State it had—by the persistent effort and energy of Colonel Bussey—been provided with the necessary camp equipage and horses, but did not receive arms until its arrival at Benton Barracks, and then was compelled to take the field armed only with sabers and revolvers. The carbine, or revolving rifle, so necessary for the complete armament of a cavalryman, was not supplied until the regiment had been in active service for a long time.

On the 12th of December, 1861, the Second Battalion, consisting of four companies, under command of Major H. C. Caldwell, was ordered to Jefferson City, Mo. Owing to the fact that this battalion did not rejoin the other eight companies of the regiment for nearly two years, during which time it performed most important and arduous service, the compiler finds it impossible to give a connected history of the operations of the regiment as a complete organization; he will, therefore, proceed to give an account of the operations of the battalion which was the first to take the field, covering the time until the regiment was reunited at Benton, Ark., early in October, 1862; and the description of the operations of the other two battalions, covering the same period of time, will then be given, followed by the operations of the regiment as a whole. The official report of Major Caldwell, covering the period to October 28, 1862, is here given in full:

HEADQUARTERS SECOND BATTALION, THIRD IOWA CAVALRY,

Camp near Lebanon, Mo., Oct. 28, 1862.

TO N. B. BAKER, Adjutant General, State of Iowa.

GENERAL: I herewith transmit to you a memorandum of the service of the Second Battalion, Third Iowa Cavalry. This battalion, composed of Company E, Captain George Duffield; Company F, Captain E. F. Crail, since resignation of Captain A. M. Robinson; Company G, Captain E. Mayne; Company H, Captain Jesse Hughes, under my command, was ordered into the field from Benton Barracks, December 12, 1861, proceeded to Jefferson City, and from thence to Booneville, Glasgow, and into the country adjacent. In the course of this expedition one hundred and seventy-three kegs of powder were captured from the enemy. On December 25th, were stationed at Fulton, Callaway Co., Mo., and were engaged constantly during the winter and ensuing spring in scouting, capturing and dispersing rebels and rebel gangs, and securing quantities of ammunition from the enemy which had been secreted for future use. In the spring detachments of my command were stationed in the counties of Callaway, Audrain and Monroe. In the forepart of the summer these counties were constituted a sub-district under my command.

On the 31st day of May, I proceeded with detachments of Companies G and H, under command of Lieutenants McCray and Hartman, respectively, to attack a rebel camp on Salt River. At the first intimation of our approach, the rebels fled precipitately; we wounded several, captured all their horses, camp equipage, and part of their arms. Our casualties were two men, of Company G, wounded. On the 22d day of July, 1862, detachments of Companies F and G, under command of Lieutenants Stidger and Hartman with sixty men, encountered the rebel Porter three hundred strong at Florida, in Monroe County, notwithstanding the great disparity in numbers, the detachment fought the rebels gallantly for one hour, when they were forced to fall back upon the post of Paris; three rebels were killed and many wounded. Our casualties were twenty-two men wounded and twenty-five prisoners. On the 24th day of July, 1862, with one hundred men, encountered the rebel Porter with his force of about four hundred men, strongly posted in a dense brush on the "Batts" farm in Monroe County. Killed one rebel and wounded many others. Our casualties were one man killed, Captain B. E. Cecil, of Company E, and nine men wounded. Porter fled south into Callaway, whither we pursued.

On the 27th day of July, 1862, one hundred men of the Ninth U. S. Cavalry and fifty men of Company E, under command of Captain DaBell of Company E, drove the rebel Porter with his force, which had been augmented to nearly eight hundred men, from Brown's Springs in Callaway County. He retreated in the direction of Moore's Mill. On July 28th, a detachment of Major S. M. Moore's Horse, and of this Battalion, with a section of the Third Indiana Battery, all under command of Colonel Guiten, encountered Porter in a strong position in a dense thicket near Moore's Mill in Callaway county. After a desperate fight of four hours the rebels were utterly routed with a loss of thirty killed and nearly one hundred wounded; a great many guns and horses fell into our hands. The casualties of this battalion were four men killed and twenty wounded. Company E of this battalion had twenty-seven horses killed. The rebels fled northward, this battalion with the other forces continued in pursuit, and on the 31st day of August found the rebels two thousand strong posted in the town of Kirksville, in Adair county. A severe engagement ensued, resulting in a complete rout of the rebels. Rebel loss one hundred and twenty-eight killed, two hundred wounded and forty taken prisoners. We captured two hundred stands of arms and about two hundred horses. Casualties in this Battalion: Killed, Captain E. Lyons, Company G; wounded, Captain Jesse Hughes, Company H; Lieutenant M. L. Birch, Company H, and ten men. Battalion continued in pursuit of rebels until rebel bands were utterly routed and dispersed, when we were ordered to this post where we are now stationed.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

H. C. CALDWELL, Major

Second Battalion, Third Iowa Cavalry

A recapitulation of the losses sustained by the battalion during the campaign shows six killed, sixty-five wounded and two captured by the enemy, total seventy-four. This was a heavy percentage of loss—more than thirty per cent of the actual number of the battalion able for duty. There is a slight discrepancy in the official reports as to the loss of the detachment of the Third Iowa Cavalry in the battle of Moore's Mill. Colonel Guiten, the senior officer in command, in his official report states that the loss of Major Cladwell's battalion was 2 killed and 24 wounded, and that the horses killed belonged almost entirely to the Third Iowa Cavalry.³ At the battle of Kirksville the loss of the Third Iowa was one-third of the total loss sustained by all the Union troops engaged. In his official report Colonel John McNeil mentions the gallant conduct of Captain Mayne, who was killed at the head of his command, and also commends the bravery and efficiency of Major Caldwell.⁴ It will thus be seen that this battalion performed most efficient and gallant service in those early days of the war, doing more than its share of the fighting and losing more than its proportion of men in the engagements in which it fought in conjunction with other troops. The subsequent operations of this battalion, prior to the time it rejoined the regiment, embraced such a wide scope that the compiler finds it impossible to describe them in detail, owing to the limited space assigned to this historical sketch. He therefore has recourse to the summarized record of the services of the battalion as given by a well known compiler of Iowa military history.⁵

. The rebels in this part of Missouri being utterly dispersed, soon after the affair of Kirksville, Major Caldwell reported with his command at Lebanon, a considerable town about fifty miles southwest of Rolla. He was soon afterwards appointed Lieutenant Colonel, in place of Trimble, who, having been severely wounded at the battle of Pea Ridge, resigned early in September, 1862.⁶ The duties of Lieutenant Colonel Caldwell's command in southern Missouri were similar to those which had been done north of the river. By the campaign of Pea Ridge, Missouri had been cleared of rebels in force. Subsequently, General Curtis having marched with the Army of the Southwest through Arkansas to Helena by Batesville, southwestern Missouri became again uncovered and liable to incursions from the insurgents moving through the passes of the Boston Mountains. Wherefore, General Schofield, with headquarters at Springfield, eventually organized the Army of the Frontier, which covered the State against the threatened attack, and in December, by the battle of Prairie Grove, warded off the principal danger. Nevertheless, Missouri was perturbed, and restless as the waters of a boiling caldron. Her Union citizens were harassed, galled, murdered by bands of roving guerrillas, and frequently considerable bodies of troops made forays into the State. It may readily be believed, therefore, that it was a difficult as well as dangerous task to protect our long lines of communications to the frontier army. This service also involved the keeping down of outbreaks and the covering of a frontier from the Iron Mountains of Missouri to the Boston Mountains of Arkansas. In this important line of duty Lieutenant Colonel Caldwell was engaged for several months, his command augmented by Companies L and M, which did not join in Curtis' march through Arkansas, being constantly engaged in fatiguing service, and oftentimes meeting the enemy in skirmish or in battle. A detachment of his command was engaged at the sharp battle of Hartsville in January, 1863, and in a number of affairs of lesser note his troops acquitted themselves with great credit. The detachment was engaged in these services of importance, but of no such general interest as to meet with much public notice till the summer of 1863, when it joined the cavalry division under General Davidson in the campaign of Little Rock. Moving by Pilot Knob, the detachment marched into Arkansas near the southeastern corner of Missouri, and thence, moving southward, joined the column under Steele near the White River, and took prominent part thenceforth in the operations which resulted in the capture of Little Rock. Afterwards, the command was actively engaged in movements in the direction of Camden, and performed services both valuable and brilliant.

⁶Lieutenant Colonel Henry H. Trimble resigned September 4, 1862, and Major H. C. Caldwell was promoted to Lieutenant Colonel September 5, 1862. Report of Adjutant General of Iowa, 1863, Vol. 2, page 451.

The official reports and correspondence in which Lieutenant Colonel Caldwell and his detached command are mentioned—always most favorably—are numerous, and the compiler regrets that his limitation of space will not permit him to make, further quotations from them.⁷

On February 4, 1862, the eight companies composing the first and third battalions of the regiment, under command of Colonel Cyrus Bussey, were ordered to proceed from Benton Barracks to Rolla, Mo., at which place they arrived on the 6th. A few days later orders were received from General Halleck to detail two companies to garrison the post at Salem, Mo., twenty-five miles southeast of Rolla. Companies I and K, under command of Major William C. Drake, were selected for this duty and, like the Second Battalion, were destined to a long separation from the rest of the regiment. On February 11, 1862, Colonel Bussey received an order from General Curtis, couched in the following language: "Come on by short route; make forced marches to overtake me." The commander of the post at Rolla telegraphed General Halleck, asking to have General Curtis' order countermanded, as he was apprehensive of an attack and needed all the troops then at the post to defend it. Other troops were forwarded to take the place of the cavalry companies and, on the morning of February 14th, Colonel Bussey left Rolla with the remaining six companies of his regiment. The weather was very cold, the roads were bad, forage was scarce, and this first long march was prosecuted under many difficulties. Knowing that General Curtis was pursuing the rebel army, that he needed reinforcements and that a battle was impending, Colonel Bussey pushed forward, night and day, only making brief halts to enable the men to procure food for themselves and horses, and reached Springfield, only to find the army gone. Leaving Company L, as a garrison at Springfield, the march was continued with the remaining five companies until the night of the 18th, when, after a march of over two hundred miles in four days, Colonel Bussey joined the army of General Curtis at Sugar Creek, Ark., with Companies A, B, C, D and M, of the Third Iowa Cavalry. After a brief rest, the detachment accompanied an expedition to Fayetteville, Ark., which captured that town, drove out a force of the enemy, killed one man and captured fifty.

From the 22d of February to the 4th of March the detachment was kept upon the move, reconnoitering towards the Boston Mountains, where the enemy were concentrating a large force. On the night of the 5th of March, the enemy, 40,000 strong, were reported advancing. The army was ordered back to Sugar Creek, a distance of twelve miles. General Sigel's division, while falling back in obedience to orders, on the morning of March 6th was attacked by the enemy, and the cavalry brigade, commanded by Colonel Bussey, (of which the five companies of the Third Iowa Cavalry formed a part.) was ordered to reinforce him. The brigade moved promptly and soon met the wounded which were being sent to the rear. This was the first experience of the detachment under fire. A running fight ensued and was kept up until the enemy abandoned the pursuit, within a few miles of the position occupied by the rest of the army at Sugar Creek. In this engagement the loss was considerable on both sides.

On the morning of March 7, 1862, the hard fought battle of Pea Ridge began. The official report of Colonel Cyrus Bussey shows how gallantly the five companies of the Third Iowa Cavalry fought during the battle, and the important service they rendered in the subsequent pursuit of the enemy. Besides the five companies, A, B, C, D and M, of the Third Iowa Cavalry, consisting of two hundred and thirty-five men and officers, the Colonel, as the ranking officer of the brigade, had under his command during the battle the following forces:

⁷War of the Rebellion Official Records, Reports and Correspondence, Series 1, Vols. 1, 13, 22, 34 and 39. Series 2, Vols. 1 and 4.

The Benton Hussars, under command of Colonel Nemett; four companies of the First Missouri Cavalry, under command of Colonel Ellis; two companies of the Fremont Hussars, under command of Lieutenant Howe, and three guns of Captain Elbert's battery. His report describes at length and with particularity of detail all the movements of his command during the battle and the pursuit which followed.⁸ The report covers the operations of all the troops under his command, the following extracts referring only to the most conspicuous portion of the service rendered by the companies of his own regiment.

After describing the preparatory movements and the taking of positions assigned to the different organizations of his command, Colonel Bussey thus describes the opening of the battle in his front:

At this point we came within full view of the enemy's cavalry passing along about a half mile distant to the north. No other force being discovered, the three guns were immediately advanced by General Osterhaus, who was present and in command, about two hundred yards, and immediately opened fire on the cavalry of the enemy on the road to the northwest. One company of the First Missouri Cavalry was in line of battle on the left of the guns and one company of the same troops on the right. The companies of the Third Iowa Cavalry were formed in line of battle in rear of the guns, parallel with the road and facing to the north. While forming the Benton Hussars in line on the right of the Third Iowa Cavalry and facing the west, I was ordered by General Osterhaus to send two companies of the Third Iowa Cavalry down the road to the west, to charge the enemy's line at a point supposed to be about a half mile distant. This order was communicated by me to Lieutenant Colonel Trimble, who immediately advanced with columns of fours, which was necessary, the road leading along a fence on the south and thick brush and woods on the north. The Benton Hussars were now in line about one hundred yards to the right and rear of the battery of three guns, and the Fremont Hussars were yet in column of fours at the edge of the prairie, having just arrived on the ground. The Third Iowa Cavalry galloped down the road, and going beyond the edge of the woods or timber on the west side of the prairie they unexpectedly found themselves in front of several lines of infantry heretofore unseen, and who were drawn up in line to the front and right of our men, at short musket range. . . . The companies of the Third Iowa Cavalry were immediately wheeled into line facing the enemy, it being impossible for them to advance in column farther, when they at once received a deadly fire from the near and overwhelming numbers of the foe, who were also partly concealed and protected by the woods and brush. A large number of my men and horses were here killed and wounded, and Lieutenant Colonel Trimble, at the head of the column, was severely wounded in the head. This fire was returned by the Third Iowa Cavalry from their revolvers with considerable effect. Just at this moment a large force of the enemy's cavalry charged from the north upon different portions of our cavalry line, and, passing through the lines, went into the fields in our rear. The Third Iowa Cavalry companies now charged this cavalry force, and an exciting running cavalry fight ensued between these forces, the enemy fleeing and being pursued by my men to the south. The enemy was followed in this direction by the Third Iowa Cavalry alone to the brush on the other side of the large open fields. The loss of the enemy in this running fight was very heavy, and estimated by me, from the most reliable information I have been able to obtain, at eighty-two.

After seeing the cavalry mentioned in line, I sent Adjutant Noble, who had remained with me on the field during the whole time, to bring up the companies of the Third Iowa Cavalry to our new position, they having pursued the enemy through the fields as above stated and not yet made their appearance. He soon returned with all the companies, having met them coming in perfect order to the place desired, the companies having returned towards the camping ground, Major Perry being in command (Lieutenant Colonel Trimble having been wounded early in the engagement, as heretofore mentioned). The enemy immediately advanced to the western edge of the field in which our new position was taken, when a general engagement ensued. . . . A force of the enemy made their appearance evidently endeavoring to turn our left flank. I sent the Third Iowa Cavalry to support Colonel Ellis. When our force appeared the enemy withdrew, were followed by Colonel Ellis about two miles, and did not again show themselves in this quarter. . . . The Third Iowa Cavalry were then formed in line of battle immediately in rear of the artillery, and maintained this position until the close of the action, when they were ordered to conduct a battery to re-enforce General Carr, who was still engaged on the right. I went with them, leaving the remainder of the cavalry force under the command of General Osterhaus. This was at 5 o'clock P. M. The accompanying report of the killed, wounded and missing of the Third Iowa Cavalry is hereby referred to as part of this report.⁹ The loss of the other forces will be reported to you by their immediate commanders. . . . On reporting to General Carr, in pursuance of the order requiring me to do so, my companies took position on the right in rear of our batteries, where we remained until after the darkness of night closed the action of the 7th. On the morning of the 8th, pursuant to order, I went with my command, now being the five companies of the Third Iowa Cavalry, into the field on the road leading to the Elkhorn Tavern, and was then ordered to take position on the right flank, where the enemy was expected to attack. This position was held by my command, with other cavalry forces, until the retreat of the enemy after the middle of the day. In pursuance of your direct order,¹⁰ my command, at 2 o'clock P. M., started in pursuit of the enemy towards Keetsville, on the road leading east, and continued to be thus engaged until night. I took fifty-nine prisoners, with some horses and arms, on this expedition. . . .

In conclusion, I beg leave to express my satisfaction with the conduct of my own men, who, in their first action, having been the first and most directly of the cavalry forces engaged with the enemy, and suffered a severe loss from an unexpected fire, yet evinced great coolness and courage in their attack upon the foe; and although the loss of my command is greater in proportion to my force than perhaps any other engaged, being twenty-four killed, seventeen wounded, and nine missing, out of two hundred thirty-five men and officers, yet it was retaliated upon the rebels by a loss to them of double that number.¹¹ You will perceive that eight of my men were scalped. That their brave comrades fighting in support of our national banner, the emblem of all that is good and great in the present civilization of the world, should thus be butchered and mangled by rebel savages has excited among my men an indignation that will, I assure you, exhibit itself on every field where they may in future be allowed to engage the enemy, in a relentless determination to put down the flag that calls to its support bands of rapacious and murdering Indian mercenaries. I have to acknowledge valuable assistance rendered me on the 7th by Adjutant John W. Noble, who acted that day as my Aide. . . .

Appended to this report is the following supplementary report of the Adjutant:

The killed were buried on Saturday after the battle was over and the pursuit ended. Hearing it reported by my men that several of the killed had been found scalped, I had the dead exhumed, and on personal examination I found that it was a fact beyond dispute that eight of the killed of my command had been scalped. The bodies of many of them showed unmistakable evidence that the men had been ¹⁰The five companies of the Third Iowa Cavalry and the other organizations under the command of Colonel Bussey, on March 7th, had not been assigned prior to the battle, and were therefore formed into a temporary brigade, of which he was placed in command. Not belonging to a brigade or division organization, he therefore made his report direct to Major General Samuel R. Curtis, the Commander in Chief of the Army of the Southwest, from whom he received the order referred to of the morning of March 8, 1862.

murdered after they were wounded; that first having fallen in the charge from bullet wounds, they were afterwards pierced through the heart and neck with knives by a savage and relentless foe. I then had the bodies re-interred, each in a separate grave, properly marked.

By order of

COLONEL CYRUS BUSSEY.

JOHN W. NOBLE, Adjutant.

There were numerous other official statements and affidavits corroborating those of Colonel Bussey and Adjutant Noble, as to the commission of these atrocities by Indians who were regularly enrolled in the rebel army. The five companies of the regiment had acquitted themselves with credit in this great battle. They had demonstrated their ability to endure hardships and their willingness to perform their whole duty under the most adverse conditions. On the 12th of March, 1862, Companies D and M were ordered to proceed to Rolla as guards to prisoners sent to that place. They performed the march of three hundred miles and returned to Springfield, arriving there on the 1st of April. On April 20th, Company D returned to the detachment with General Curtis' army. Companies L and M were subsequently ordered to Lebanon, Mo., under command of Major C. H. Perry, who was assigned to the command of that post. These companies were employed constantly during the summer guarding trains from Rolla to Springfield and had several encounters with the enemy, in all of which they were victorious. In the meantime, Companies I and K, had been stationed at Salem, Mo., from which place they performed important service, which may be summarized as follows: Scout of detachment of twenty-five men, under command of Adjutant Cutler, to the head of the Marvamec, a distance of fifty miles; encountered a force of the enemy and captured eighteen rebels, including a captain and lieutenant.

On the 20th of February, 1862, Major Drake with his command attacked a force under the rebel Colonel Coleman, at West Plains, Mo., killing and wounding twenty-five men and capturing sixty prisoners and a large number of horses and arms. Between the 20th and 23th, these companies were scouting the country and almost every day had encounters with the enemy. On the 8th of March, 1862, Major Drake's detachment joined the battalion of the Sixth Missouri Cavalry, commanded by Lieutenant Colonel Wood and, a few days later, these two detachments started in pursuit of a rebel force, which they overtook near Spring River Mills, just across the border in Arkansas. After a severe engagement the rebel force was defeated with a loss on the Union side of three killed and twenty-one wounded and a loss to the rebels estimated at one hundred. In his official report of this engagement, Lieutenant Colonel Wood makes special mention of the gallant conduct of Major Drake, Adjutant Cutler and others of the Third Iowa Cavalry detachment.¹² Major Drake rejoined the regiment with his detachment about the 1st of April, near Forsyth, Mo. The companies of the regiment now attached to General Curtis' army were kept actively employed in scouting, from the 6th of April to the 1st of May, while that army was on the march by way of Cassville, Forsyth, Osage, and West Plains and Salem, to Batesville, a distance of nearly three hundred miles, over mountains and rivers, and through a country almost destitute of supplies. The regiment made numerous expeditions, watching the movements of the enemy, but not coming into contact with any considerable force until May 30th, on which date it had a severe skirmish with a rebel force at Sylamore, fifty miles above Batesville, on White River. The enemy was defeated with considerable loss, including twenty-five prisoners, fifty horses, arms and other property. The loss of the Third Iowa Cavalry was as follows: Sergeant S. B. Millan, killed; Captain Israel Anderson and Private Joseph T. French, severely wounded.

On the 1st of June, the Third Iowa Cavalry was assigned to the First Division, commanded by General Steele, and ordered to Sulphur Rock, where it remained until June 22d, when it was ordered to Jacksonport, from which place on June 27th, Lieutenant Alvin H. Griswold, with twenty men of Company K, was detailed to guard a forage train and, while engaged on this duty, was attacked by a party of the enemy concealed in ambush near the road over which the train was passing. Lieutenant Griswold and his small force made a gallant resistance and saved the train from capture, but nearly one-half of the detachment were killed and wounded. Those killed were Lieutenant Alvin H. Griswold, Corporal Thomas Wasson and Private Richard Leike; the wounded were James M. Beacom, Edwin Beckwith, Wesley Pringle, James Marsh and Marcus Packard. In officially reporting this loss, Colonel Bussey says: "Lieutenant Griswold was a most faithful and efficient officer, and a gentleman, whose loss will be deeply felt by a large circle of friends in the regiment and in Iowa, where he leaves a wife and two children."

On the 1st of July the army again advanced. The Third Iowa Cavalry was kept well to the front and had its full share of duty in scouting and skirmishing. On the 7th, Matthew D. Williams, of Company C, was killed. On the 8th, the army arrived at Clarendon. The weather was intensely hot, the supply of rations nearly exhausted, the water was bad, and the soldiers suffered greatly from sickness and the heat. Colonel Bussey was now in command of the Third Brigade, First Division, and Major Drake was in command of the regiment. The army left Clarendon July 11th and, in three days, reached Helena. During the remainder of the summer the regiment was engaged in scouting the country from White River to the St. Francis, having frequent skirmishes, but meeting no considerable force of the enemy. On the 10th of September the regiment was transferred to First Brigade of the Division and, on October 1, was transferred to the Third Brigade of the Fourth Division. During the months of September, October and November, the regiment was very actively engaged, marched several hundred miles, and captured many prisoners and a large number of horses and other valuable property.

On the 20th of September the Third Iowa Cavalry formed a part of a force of two thousand cavalry under command of Colonel Bussey. This force was attached to the troops under General Hovey in his expedition against Arkansas Post. The expedition involved great hardship, Colonel Bussey's force marching through almost impassable cypress swamps to Prairie Landing, on White River, where he expected to meet the troops of General Hovey, which were being conveyed on transports; though, owing to low water, the latter could not get up the river, and the original plan of the expedition was abandoned. Colonel Bussey's force marched back through the swamps to Montgomery's Point and from thence to Helena, where he joined the army under General Steele. He then crossed the Mississippi River at Friars' Point and advanced by way of Coldwater to Grenada, where he burned the railroad bridge and destroyed a portion of the track, thus inflicting great damage to the enemy's line of transportation. On his return he was attacked by a force of the enemy near Panola and, after a severe skirmish, defeated him. In this skirmish Company D, of the Third Iowa Cavalry, lost four men, captured by the enemy. The command was again attacked near Coldwater, but drove off the enemy and arrived at Helena after an absence of two weeks. A large number of horses were captured on this expedition.

The army was reorganized on the 16th of December, by General Gorman, who had assumed command at Helena. The Third Iowa Cavalry was transferred to the Second Cavalry Division of the Army of the Tennessee, commanded by Major General C. C. Washburne, and, with five others, formed the Second Brigade of that division. On the 10th of January, 1863, the army was ordered to proceed against Little Rock, Ark., but, just as the division was ready to march, the order was countermanded, so far as Colonel Bussey's command was concerned, he having been assigned to the command of the District of Eastern Arkansas. Major William C. Drake died of disease on the 24th of November. By his death the regiment lost a faithful, brave and accomplished officer. The command of the regiment then devolved upon Major O. H. P. Scott. During the winter the regiment performed its usual work of scouting and watching the movements of the enemy, but it was not until the 5th of March that any considerable force was encountered. Upon that date the regiment routed a considerable force near Madison, Ark., and captured a number of prisoners. On the 4th of April, Lieutenant Niblack, Company D, with twenty-five men charged a rebel force at Madison, killed and wounded a number and captured fifty-six prisoners. The remainder of the rebel force, over one hundred, was driven off. In the charge Lieutenant Niblack was severely wounded. With the prisoners, horses, arms and other property were captured.

Major General Prentiss was now in command of the army at Helena. On the 6th of April, 1863, Colonel Bussey, who had commanded all the brigades with which his regiment had served, was assigned to the command of the Second Cavalry Division, Army of the Tennessee, relieving General Washburne, who was ordered to Memphis. The rebels were concentrating in force on White River and their scouting parties were frequently seen in the vicinity of Helena. When not on scouting duty, the regiment, under the direction of Major Scott, was engaged in strengthening the defenses of Helena. On the 21st and 27th of April, detachments of the regiment had skirmishes with scouting parties of the enemy. On May 1st, Captain J. Q. A. De Huff, of Company B, with one hundred and sixty men of the Third Iowa Cavalry, was sent on an expedition to the town of La Grange, for the purpose of observing the movements of the enemy. When within a mile of the town, Captain De Huff's detachment encountered a force of the enemy posted in the woods on either side of the road. A brisk engagement ensued and, just as the enemy in front were beginning to give way, another force of the enemy's cavalry charged the rear of the detachment, thus putting them between two fires of an overwhelming force. In this desperate situation Captain De Huff realized the danger of the capture of his entire command. The following extract from his official report will show how the engagement terminated:¹³

My force had expended their revolver and most of their carbine fire, and it became evident I must retire or be completely overwhelmed. I got my men into column and directed them to the left, falling back through the timber a distance of some three miles. The enemy pursued with vigor, but were kept in fear of too near approach by the firing of the reloaded carbines of my rear guard. Some of my men were also able to reload their revolvers and discharge them at the enemy. Making a circuit I again came to the La Grange road, to the rear of the place of attack about four miles. My men had become somewhat scattered, and, on coming into the La Grange road, I retired toward Helena, until reinforced by the remainder of the regiment and the Fifth Kansas Cavalry. We then advanced to the place of conflict, and found the enemy had fled, taking with them their dead and wounded. The loss on our side was three killed, eight wounded, thirty missing,—probably taken prisoners,—total forty-one. Among the wounded are Regimental Adjutant Glenn Lowe and ¹³Report of Adjutant General of Iowa, 1864, pages 524, 5.

Second Lieutenant Cornelius A. Stanton, Company I. A list of the names of the officers and men killed, wounded and missing accompanies this report. My advanced guard—twenty-nine men of Company D under command of Lieutenant Niblack¹⁴—deserve particular notice for the manly stand they made against the enemy, whose hottest fire they withstood with the most determined bravery. Lieutenant Stanton was at the head of the column, and fearlessly assailed the enemy with his command—Company I. He was wounded in his left arm very severely early in the engagement, and from loss of blood was compelled to retire from the field. Adjutant Glenn Lowe was also at the head of the column, and throughout this uneven contest displayed a heroism of an unusual character. His horse was shot from under him as soon as he came up with the enemy. He at once mounted another and, as the attack in the rear commenced, drew his saber and encouraged our men with his voice. At this time he was shot through the ankle and afterwards fell into the hands of the enemy, who treated him with kindness and left him in a neighboring house without paroling him. Sergeant Breeding, Company A, and Corporal Birdsall, Company B, attacked a party of the enemy who had five prisoners and, killing two of the rebels, released our men, who thus escaped. Many minor skirmishes took place during our retreat, in all of which a continuous resistance was made, with fatal effect to the enemy. I do not desire to give particular praise when all did as well as men could do against such odds, and I have only to regret that my force was not greater. With the valor of my men I am satisfied. The loss inflicted on the enemy was not less than forty men killed and wounded. Many of their dead were seen upon the field.

On the 25th of May, Lieutenant McKee, Company B, with fifty men of Companies A and B, encountered the enemy in superior force seven miles from Helena and sustained a loss of five men wounded and two missing. The official report of Lieutenant McKee shows how well the honor of the regiment was sustained in that engagement.¹⁵

The headquarters of the regiment had now been located at Helena for about eleven months. Colonel Bussey was anxious to have his regiment transferred to General Grant's army, at Vicksburg, and had made frequent requests for such transfer. On the 4th of June, 1863, the long wished for order came and the regiment, with its camp equipage and horses, was soon embarked on transports, which landed at Snyder's Bluff on June 8th. Upon his arrival, Colonel Bussey was assigned to the position of Chief of Cavalry and immediately entered upon the discharge of his important duties. The rebel army, under General Johnston, was concentrating along Black River and watching for the opportune moment (which never came) to hurl his forces on the rear of Grant's army and raise the siege of Vicksburg. The gigantic struggle for the possession of that mighty stronghold was in progress, and constant and unremitting activity was required of all the troops. From the day the Third Iowa Cavalry disembarked until the surrender of Vicksburg, the officers and men had but brief intervals of rest. They were almost constantly in the saddle, scouting the country along the Big Black, guarding the fords and ferries and keeping watchful eyes upon the movements of the enemy. It was the turning point in the great conflict, and every nerve was being strained—on both sides—to achieve the victory which meant either the triumph of the rebellion or the beginning of its certain defeat and the absolute assurance of a restored Union.

Upon the surrender of Vicksburg, (July 4, 1863,) a cavalry brigade, composed of the Third and Fourth Iowa, Second Wisconsin and Fifth Illinois, under command of Colonel Cyrus Bussey of the Third Iowa Cavalry, crossed ¹⁴It will be noted by the reader that this gallant officer had been severely wounded less than one month before this engagement. He could, therefore, have scarcely had time to fully recover from his wound before he was again in the saddle and ready to meet the enemy. A typical Iowa soldier, whose memory should be revered.

the Big Black River at Messinger's Ferry, and at once took the advance of the army, under command of General Sherman, which General Grant had ordered to proceed against the rebel army commanded by General Johnston. From the morning of the 6th to the 11th of July, Colonel Bussey's command was constantly at the front, covering the movements of the infantry and artillery in his rear, having daily skirmishes with the enemy's cavalry, until the rebel army was driven into its intrenchments at Jackson. While General Sherman's army was prosecuting the siege of Jackson, Colonel Bussey's cavalry command, acting under the orders of General Sherman, had proceeded to destroy a portion of the railroad to the north of the enemy's works, and then marched in the direction of Canton, twenty-five miles further to the north, and, in conjunction with a force of infantry and artillery, engaged the enemy, driving him into Canton on the night of July 17th. That night the enemy evacuated Canton, and the next morning Colonel Bussey marched into the town with his command, and proceeded to destroy factories and machine shops, which had been engaged in the manufacture of equipments for the rebel army, also a large number of cars and locomotives which had been used in transporting supplies for the rebels. A part of Colonel Bussey's command was sent to destroy the railroad bridge over the Big Black River, together with the railway property at Way's Bluff, which was successfully accomplished, and the command was again concentrated at Canton that night. The next day Colonel Bussey marched with his command to Messinger's Ferry and went into camp. From the 5th to the 20th of July, the Third Iowa Cavalry had performed a series of important operations, as a part of the brigade under the command of its gallant Colonel Bussey, and had received his earnest commendation for the prompt and skillful manner in which it had executed all his orders. Had the record of the regiment ended with that glorious campaign, its fame and that of its gallant Colonel would have been secure.¹⁶

The official report of Colonel Bussey, as Chief of Cavalry, while covering the movements of all the cavalry forces during this history making period, shows that the Third Iowa Cavalry performed its full share of duty and fully sustained the good record it had made by its previous service. At the conclusion of his report Colonel Bussey acknowledges the valuable service rendered him by Captain H. D. B. Cutler, A. A. A. G., and Lieutenant D. E. Jones, A. A. Q. M., of his staff, both of whom were officers of the Third Iowa Cavalry.¹⁷

The operations of the regiment connected with the campaign and siege of Vicksburg covered the period from June 8 to August 10, 1863. The latter date found the regiment encamped upon the bank of the Big Black River, in rear of Vicksburg, where it remained until August 10th, in the enjoyment of a well earned rest. Major Scott having resigned, the regiment was now under the command of Major Noble.

On the 10th of August the regiment was again upon the march, attached to an independent cavalry brigade composed of the Third and Fourth Iowa and Fifth Illinois regiments, under command of Colonel E. F. Winslow, of the Fourth Iowa Cavalry. Major John W. Noble in his official report fully describes the operations of his regiment on this important expedition. The total strength of the brigade was but eight hundred men, but the damage they inflicted upon the enemy, in killed, wounded and prisoners, and the destruction of rolling stock of the Mississippi Central Railroad, was very great and out of all proportion to the loss sustained by the brigade, which was only two killed, five wounded, and six missing. The casualties in the Third Iowa Cavalry were four men wounded. The brigade marched two hundred sixty-five miles, mostly through country occupied by the enemy, arriving at Memphis, Aug. 22, 1863. On the 26th of August the regiment embarked at Memphis with orders to return to Vicksburg, but, on reaching Helena, was ordered to disembark and report to General Steele, then on the march with his army to Little Rock, Ark. The regiment marched from Helena, by way of Clarendon and reached Little Rock (which had been occupied by General Steele's army on the 10th of September) on the 1st day of October, and was ordered to proceed immediately to Benton, Ark., an important outpost of the army, occupied by the other six companies of the regiment, and commanded by Lieutenant Colonel H. C. Caldwell. Here the entire twelve companies were reunited, after a separation of nearly two years. The cordial greetings exchanged by these war-worn soldiers and the intense interest with which they listened to each others' description of the trials and dangers through which they had passed during this long period of separation may well be imagined.

The duties performed by the regiment at this outpost were arduous. Forage trains requiring heavy guards were sent out almost daily, and detachments were frequently sent on scouting expeditions extending forty to fifty miles into the surrounding country. On the 26th of October the regiment was ordered to reinforce the post at Pine Bluffs, and arrived at that place after a day and night march. The enemy had been repulsed and was then moving toward Arkadelphia. The regiment followed, surrounded the town and captured a number of prisoners, arms, horses, mules and wagons, belonging to the rear guard, but the main body of the enemy succeeded in escaping. Early in November the regiment engaged in an expedition for the purpose of bringing into the Federal lines several hundred refugees—loyal citizens of Arkansas, who had banded together and taken refuge in the mountains to escape the rebel conscription. Nearly three hundred men and horses were brought out from their hiding places. These men were glad to be given the opportunity to enlist in the Union army. During this expedition the regiment captured a rebel Major with twenty-five soldiers of his command. During the month of November Colonel Bussey commanded the cavalry division. (General Davidson being absent,) but, upon the General's return, on the 1st of December, Colonel Bussey resumed command of the First Brigade and the Post at Benton. On the 10th of December he conducted an expedition to Princeton, where a force of the enemy was encountered, several of whom were killed and wounded and thirty prisoners captured. On the 20th of December, having exhausted all the forage in the country, the post of Benton was evacuated and the regiment, with the brigade, returned to Little Rock.

On the 1st of January, 1864, more than six hundred men of the regiment re-enlisted for three years as veteran volunteers. This number embraced nearly all the men who were at that time present and able for duty. A few days later the regiment was relieved from duty and provided with transportation to Iowa. Keokuk was designated as the place at which the men were to receive their furloughs and the rendezvous at which they were to assemble when the furloughs should end, the time being limited to thirty days. On the 12th of February the men left Keokuk for their respective homes and, on the 12th of March, had reassembled at Keokuk, bringing with them seven hundred recruits for the regiment, which was immediately ordered to proceed to St. Louis, and, upon its arrival there, was provided with a new and complete equipment of arms, horses and everything necessary for active service in the field. The aggregate strength of the regiment was now greater than when it first left the State of Iowa, in November, 1861, and it was ready to again take the field under the most favorable conditions. In the meantime, Colonel Cyrus Bussey had been promoted to Brigadier General, and Lieutenant Colonel H. C. Caldwell succeeded him as Colonel of the regiment. On May 23, 1864, President Lincoln appointed Colonel Caldwell judge of the United States district court for the State of Arkansas, and the Colonel resigned to accept the appointment. Lieutenant Colonel John W. Noble was then promoted to Colonel and Major George Duffield to Lieutenant Colonel: Captains Jones and McCrary were promoted to Majors.¹⁸ The regiment moved from St. Louis to Memphis, where it arrived in the latter part of April and where it performed patrol and picket duty—when not absent on expeditions—until late in December. During the months of June, July and August the regiment was engaged in the expeditions to Guntown, Tupelo and Oxford, Miss. In the months of September, October and November, the available portion of the regiment took part in the campaign in Missouri, against the army of the rebel General Price.¹⁹

The expedition to Guntown, under the command of General Sturgis, was a disastrous blunder and failure, owing entirely to the incompetency of the General in command. In his official report of the operations of the Third Iowa Cavalry on this expedition, Colonel Noble gives a most complete and accurate description of every movement of the regiment, and shows the importance of its service—in connection with the other regiments of the cavalry brigade to which it was attached—in acting as rear guard during the retreat and saving the army from being utterly overwhelmed and captured by the enemy.²⁰ After describing in detail the movements of the regiment and its encounters with the enemy during the advance and up to the time the battle at Brice's Cross Roads began, Colonel Noble thus describes the situation at the most critical period of that battle:

. . . . At this juncture, my whole command was relieved by regiments of infantry, and was retiring when the infantry became engaged. We formed a new line immediately in their rear, rather than in appearance to leave them in an emergency. After the order was received for us to retire to our horses, this regiment did so in the best order, mounting by companies and forming a column of squadrons. The contest on the field and in line lasted but a short time after this, and the enemy was hotly pressing his victory. The infantry was filing past us in great numbers. The train was turned to the rear, and it became necessary for us to take a second position, mounted, to protect the retreating column. A column of squadrons was again formed, facing the enemy, who failed to attack with small arms, but finally opened upon this regiment a heavy canonade of round shot and shell. These fell around my men, wounding a number, but causing not the least disorder. By order we moved further to the rear something near half a mile, and again formed in squadrons faced to the enemy, who kept at a distance and used his artillery only. Our own artillery was being retired and did not protect us. After holding our position for some time, we were ordered to retire, which we did in the best order, not an officer or soldier being out of his place. . . . The greatest difficulty was found in recrossing the bayou or swamp in our rear, and in it were caught most of the artillery and train of the army. Arriving at Stubbs' plantation, on our camping ground of the night previous, we rested from about 11 P. M. to 2 A. M., when we again moved toward Ripley, holding the rear. After daylight, two squadrons were sent by me a mile to the rear, and a line formed by battalion to support them, when the few infantry who had not already passed us were brought up and sent forward. But after this the enemy began to assail us with great determination, and it was only by the greatest energy and courage that my squadrons, Companies L, M and A, united under Captain Brown, and Company B, under Captain DeHuff, were able to hold the bridge leading to Ripley. They did so, however, until relieved by the Fourth Iowa Cavalry, who now took the rear. . . . My regiment now accompanied General Grierson to Ripley by his own personal orders.

¹⁹The official reports of Colonel John W. Noble, covering the operations of his regiment during this period and subsequently, to the close of the war, would occupy more space than the compiler is able to give to this entire sketch. He can, therefore, only make occasional extracts from them and refer the reader to the volumes of military history in which they may be found.

Arriving at Ripley . . . I was notified that the enemy was about to attack on the left, and to prepare for him. I formed in a column of squadrons, faced to the rear immediately, and at the same time was ordered to support the Fourth Iowa Cavalry then in action. . . . My advance in line was under severe fire, and over fields broken by high fences and deep ditches. . . . The enemy was checked, and the position held until, his object obtained, General Grierson ordered me to retire. To retire at this point was a matter of no little difficulty, for the enemy, having no resistance elsewhere, were flanking us as well as pressing from the rear. Their fire was redoubled as we moved again upon the road. In this stand we lost Lieutenant Miller, of Company D, who fell wounded, bravely fighting and facing the foe; also Corporal Gilchrist, Company C, was killed, and others wounded. . . . I have the satisfaction of knowing that the enemy did not escape without punishment; his flag was seen to fall three times under our fire, and many of his men were killed and wounded. To hold the rear of a rapidly retreating column against a superior and assailing enemy now became the task of my regiment, and resulted in considerable loss to us. Companies I and K were thrown to the rear, under the command of Major Jones. A column of the enemy, advancing through the surrounding thickets, came upon them while they were gallantly holding another regiment at bay, and charging them suddenly, after much resistance, by overpowering numbers captured most of those who are reported in the accompanying tables. . . . Platoon after platoon was thrown out right and left along our road, and, facing to the rear, presented front to the rebels. . . . This method of defense was continued throughout the morning and afternoon. A cavalry force of our men and an infantry command now gave my regiment temporary relief. But the enemy still pressing, the cavalry failed to hold their place and a portion of the infantry was thrown into confusion and captured. . . . I immediately formed another battalion line, supporting it with squadrons placed at advantageous points, the infantry left passed through my line, and I was once more contending with the advance of the enemy. The duty was severe, and, in view of what had already been performed, somewhat unexpected; but, as it had been assigned to help others, it was persevered in without complaint as long as strength was left to resist. I was finally relieved by the Fourth Iowa Cavalry, and they by the Second New Jersey. After this my command was not again under fire. The rest of the day the column advanced without food or rest, except a short halt at evening, when, the enemy approaching, the column was again put in motion, and the march continued through the night and next morning to LaFayette.

Colonel Noble concludes his report by a description of the remainder of the march to Memphis. This was the most unfortunate expedition in which the regiment participated during its long term of service. That it maintained its well won reputation as a fighting organization and demonstrated most completely the efficiency of the cavalry arm of the service, both upon the advance and retreat of the army, is shown by the foregoing extracts from Colonel Noble's report, which is also verified by other official reports of cavalry and infantry commanders upon that expedition.² The compiler has given much more space to this report than he will be able to devote to those which follow, for the reason, drawn from his own experience and that of others, that it is the severest test of the bravery and fortitude of soldiers and their commanders to obey orders and persist in fighting under the demoralizing conditions resulting from the blunders and incapacity of a General unfit to command an army. It is under such conditions that men and officers exhibit the nearest approach to total self abnegation of which human nature is capable, save only that matchless spirit of self sacrifice shown by the Union soldiers who suffered in the prison pens of the South. At the close of his report, Colonel Noble says:

I refer to the accompanying tables for a more definite statement of my losses in this most unfortunate expedition, in which my command labored so hard and fought so well. My officers and men behaved universally so well that I cannot make much distinction among them. But, for their aid in getting a new line to face the enemy at one particular emergency, I deem Captain Curkendall, of Company D, and Lieutenant McKee, of Company B, worthy of particular notice. Major Jones was constantly at his post, and did all a good and brave officer could. If occasion offers, I hope to bring the merits of others of the brave men more prominently forward than I can do now.

The aggregate number of the regiment engaged upon this expedition was five hundred forty-five. Its aggregate loss was seventy. The report of Colonel E. F. Winslow of the Fourth Iowa Cavalry, who commanded the brigade, shows an aggregate loss in his command of one hundred twenty-six. He also reports the loss of horses on the expedition, as follows: Forty killed, one hundred eighteen wounded, and two hundred twenty-eight abandoned, of which number the Third Iowa Cavalry lost nineteen killed, forty-one wounded and one hundred abandoned.²² The figures show conclusively the hard and persistent fighting done by the cavalry as the rear guard of that army.

The regiment arrived at Memphis on June 14th, and remained in camp until the 24th, when all the officers and men able for duty started upon another expedition, this time under the command of that able and energetic officer, Major General A. J. Smith, who knew how to handle men in battle and care for them on the march. The regiment was engaged in many skirmishes on this expedition, participated in the battle of Tupelo, and performed its full share of duty with the other cavalry regiments associated with it. The enemy was defeated in every encounter and the disasters of the previous campaign were fully retrieved. In his official report Colonel Noble gives a detailed account of the operations of his regiment, and especially commends the valor displayed by his officers and men in an encounter which occurred on the 13th of July, at Oldtown Creek, in which the enemy was driven from a very strong position.²³ Special mention is made of the meritorious conduct on this occasion—and at all times during the expedition—of Major Duffield, Captain Crail and Captain Brown, commanders of battalions, and Captains McCrary and Johnson. The regiment returned to Memphis on July 13th, having marched nearly four hundred miles while on the expedition, during which the casualties were as follows: Enlisted men killed one; wounded seventeen; missing one. Horses, killed, eighteen; wounded eighteen; worn out and abandoned eleven.

On the 25th of July, 1864, all the cavalry at Memphis—consisting of fourteen regiments—was organized as a cavalry army corps, composed of two divisions, the first under command of General Hatch, (former Colonel of the Second Iowa,) and the second under command of Colonel Winslow, of the Fourth

Iowa, the whole under command of General Grierson. The Second Brigade of the Second Division was composed of the Third and Fourth Iowa and Tenth Missouri, with Colonel Noble as Brigade Commander, and Major B. S. Jones in command of the Third Iowa. On the 5th of August this cavalry force left Memphis and, in co-operation with General A. J. Smith's Division of Infantry, proceeded upon an expedition to Oxford, Miss. The Third Iowa performed its share of duty upon this expedition, but did not suffer any serious casualties. It returned with the other troops to Memphis, on August 30th, just in time to start upon one of the most important campaigns in the history of its service—that against the rebel army commanded by General Price, which had again invaded the State of Missouri.

The campaign against Price was one of the most brilliant and effective of the closing campaigns of the western armies, and during its entire progress the Third Iowa Cavalry performed most arduous and conspicuous service.²¹ Major B. S. Jones, who commanded the regiment during this period of its service, gives a carefully detailed account of all its movements in his official report.²² His report is dated at Benton Barracks, Mo., November 28, 1864. Major Jones assumed command, and left Memphis with his regiment on the morning of September 2, 1864. At that time the available mounted force of the regiment was 483 men and 15 line officers, and formed a part of the brigade commanded by Colonel Winslow of the Fourth Iowa Cavalry. The command marched to Cape Girardeau, Mo., arriving there October 5th, and, embarking on transports, proceeded to St. Louis, where it arrived on October 10th. The next day it started on the march up the Missouri Valley, marching rapidly and almost constantly until October 22d, on which date it joined the forces under Major General Pleasanton, then engaged in conflict with the enemy near Independence, Mo., participated in that battle, and in the battles of the Big Blue and Osage Rivers, which quickly followed, the first being fought on the 23d and the second on the 25th of October. In all three of these battles the Third Iowa Cavalry distinguished itself, boldly charging the enemy and capturing many prisoners. The following extracts are made from the concluding portion of the official report of Major Jones, referring to the conduct of his regiment in the battle on the Osage River, and the closing scenes of the campaign:

. . . . The enemy, having been routed from his position on the river, was followed up at a gallop for several miles, by Winslow's brigade, in the following order, Tenth Missouri, Fourth Iowa, Third Iowa, Fourth Missouri and Seventh Indiana Cavalry, when he attempted to make a stand, formed on the open prairie, in two lines of battle, supported by eight pieces of artillery. My command was formed in line of battle, with the brigade in column of regiments, in their order of march, and constituting the left center of our whole line. We charged the enemy, breaking his right and center, killing, wounding and capturing many of his men. Among the captured were Generals Marmaduke and Cabell, the former by Private James Dunlavy, of Company D, and the latter by Sergeant C. M. Young, of Company L, both of the Third Iowa Cavalry. Companies C, D and E captured three pieces of the enemy's artillery. The whole of my command did nobly on that field, as also on others, and the highest commendations are due to every man and officer. The remainder of this day was one continued charge upon the enemy, and his complete rout. We rested on the open prairie over night, near Fort Scott. On the 26th of October we rested, with our brigade, at Fort Scott. Early on the 27th, again joined in the pursuit of the enemy, and continued through Arkansas and the Indian Territory to a point on the Arkansas River, forty miles above Fort Smith, without again seeing the enemy.

²¹During this expedition Colonel Noble was in command of a portion of his own and other regiments, which remained in Memphis.

²²Report of Adjutant General of Iowa, 1865, Vol. 2, pages 960 to 963 inclusive.

From there we returned to this place, having marched, since September 2d, 1,650 miles, participated in three general engagements, marching through a country destitute of forage, it having been devastated by the enemy, and many times without food for my men, having had only three-fifths rations from the 28th ult. to the 7th inst., and not any bread from the 7th to the 12th inst., in consequence of the destitution of the Indian Territory through which we marched, and the great distance from the base of supplies. We suffered a total loss of six men killed, and two officers and forty-one men wounded, several of whom have since died. I append a list of casualties.

During the absence of Major Jones and his command, that portion of the regiment which had been left at Memphis, consisting of eleven commissioned officers and three hundred and nine enlisted men, under the command of Colonel Noble, took part in an expedition under General Grierson, passing over much of the ground over which the regiment had previously marched and fought, but not meeting any considerable force of the enemy, the main object of the expedition being the destruction of the railroad and rolling stock and military stores and other property belonging to the rebel army. This was accomplished in a very effectual manner, and the scattered forces of the enemy, which endeavored to rally and oppose the advance of General Grierson's command, were easily overcome and dispersed. In his official report Colonel Noble gives an account of the vast amount of property destroyed, and describes the various movements of his command on this expedition.²⁶ The casualties were: Private Nelson Pringle, Company K, wounded and captured January 1, 1865; Private James Barr, Company B, mortally wounded January 4, 1865, and one man missing name not reported. On the 5th of January, 1865, Colonel Noble entered Vicksburg with his command and embarked on Steamer "E. H. Fairchild." He concludes his report with the statement that his command arrived at Memphis on January 11, 1865, where he received orders to proceed to Louisville, Ky., the portion of the regiment under command of Major Jones having already departed for that place. At Louisville the regiment was once more united and received a supply of Spencer carbines, a remount of fresh horses and the other equipments necessary to put it again in perfect marching and fighting condition.²⁷

While these two portions of the regiment were engaged upon the expedition as heretofore described, the men and officers who had not re-enlisted and whose term of service had expired were mustered out of the service and returned to their homes in Iowa. The names of these soldiers will be found in the subjoined roster, with the dates of their honorable discharge by reason of expiration of term of service. They had, in fact, become veterans, although not so officially designated. They had faithfully served the full term of three years, many of them were not in physical condition to be again mustered into the service, and all of them had earned the right to retire with honor and without being subjected to criticism by comparison with their comrades who preferred to serve until the end of the war. Therefore, while those who remained have the official right to the title of Veterans, and are so designated in the roster, the lack of that title should not be considered as a disparagement to those who did not re-enlist when their original term of three years had expired.

The reunited Veterans, under command of Colonel John W. Noble, remained in camp at Louisville while preparations were being made for the next and last great campaign in which they were to engage. The regiment was assigned to the First Brigade of the Fourth Division of the Cavalry Corps, commanded by Brevet Major General James H. Wilson. The division was under the command of Brevet Major General Emory Upton, and the brigade—consisting of the Third and Fourth Iowa and Tenth Missouri Cavalry—was under the command of Brevet Brigadier General Edward F. Winslow. The three regiments numbered about two thousand four hundred men and officers. It was especially fitting that these regiments, which had so long been associated together, should be retained in the brigade and commanded by an officer under whom they had fought so often and in whom they had implicit confidence. It was evident that this last struggle was to be a desperate one. The cavalry forces of the enemy were under the command of Lieutenant General N. B. Forrest, of whose ability and courage no troops on the Union side had better knowledge than those composing Winslow's Brigade, which had so often fought the rebel forces under command of that intrepid Southern leader.

The regiment with its brigade marched from Louisville to Chickasaw Landing on the Tennessee River, where the first active operations of the campaign commenced on March 21, 1865, and ended at Macon, Ga., with the close of the war. There was no engagement during this great campaign, in which Winslow's Brigade participated, in which the Third Iowa Cavalry was not conspicuous. The brigade commander recognized the meritorious conduct of Colonel Noble and his gallant regiment and highly commended them, as will be seen by the following extracts taken from his official report:²⁸

HEADQUARTERS FIRST BRIGADE, FOURTH DIVISION, C. C. M. D. M.,
MACON, GA., April 21, 1865.

MAJOR: I have the honor to submit the following report of operations of my command since leaving Chickasaw Landing, Tennessee River, March 21st last. The distance marched, direct, has been four hundred eighty-eight miles, while the scouting, expeditionary, flanking, and foraging marches swell the number of miles to an average of six hundred to each regiment. Though much of this has been over a mountainous and partially sterile region, we have found sufficient corn, and if it were not for the long, hard marches, often extending into the night, our animals would now be in exceedingly good condition. Those worn out have been abandoned or turned over to the negroes, and their places supplied with captured horses and mules. The general conduct of officers and men has been excellent. . . . We had slight skirmishing before entering Montevallo, March 30th, one man of the Fourth Iowa Cavalry being slightly wounded. March 31st, my brigade moved in rear of the division, when, a few miles south of Montevallo, it passed to the front, and the Tenth Missouri Cavalry, being dismounted, the enemy, an Alabama brigade, was at once pushed out of position. Two men of the Tenth Missouri were wounded. While this regiment mounted, the Third Iowa Cavalry, Colonel J. W. Noble commanding, took the advance and one company charged the enemy on the road, at a time when its column was in retreat. A portion of the enemy being separated from their main force, Captain Johnson, with two companies, was sent to the right, and, charging, captured quite a number. Several of the enemy were killed and wounded. This officer acted with vigor and gallantry. The enemy were driven in great confusion to Randolph, leaving many animals and a number of men along the road and seventy-five prisoners in our hands. Colonel Noble led his regiment, which behaved admirably, and his Adjutant lost his horse in the first charge. . . .

Moved April 1st in rear of the division and, when at Mapleville Station, heard firing in front; receiving soon afterwards orders to push forward rapidly, two regiments, Third Iowa Cavalry leading, were hastened to the battle-ground of Ebenezer Church, arriving just as the engagement was being decided. Captain Armin, Company I, was thrown out on the left of the road and directed to charge a line of the enemy formed on the bank of the creek four hundred yards from the head of my column. This company, having to throw down a fence under a severe fire, had one officer, Lieutenant J. J. Veatch, and several men, wounded, losing also about fifteen horses. Captain Arnim and his company behaved in a gallant manner, as did also Captain Alonzo Clark, Fourth Iowa Cavalry, A. A. Q. M., who voluntarily aided in conducting this movement. The column moving forward, the enemy quickly retired, and the Third Iowa Cavalry was sent in pursuit, following the enemy to Plantersville, five miles. Captain John D. Brown, Company L, charged his men over a deep stream, capturing more of the enemy (a color company) than his command numbered. This officer had been sent with his company to Mapleville early in the day, and, meeting a body of the enemy, charged it, capturing several and scattering the others. Sergeant John Wall, guidon bearer of Company K, after being wounded in the hand, retained the saddle, carried his colors and, in a subsequent engagement, captured a rebel officer.

We arrived near Selma, April 2d, at 2 P. M., dismounting in battalion lines until 5 o'clock. At that hour, in obedience to orders from the Brevet Major General commanding the division, I dismounted my command and, leaving every eighth man to hold horses, formed the Third Iowa on the right and the Tenth Missouri on the left of the Plantersville road, in line, about half a mile from the rebel works and fronting them. Seven companies, Fourth Iowa, were preparing to move to the left of the Tenth Missouri, when the Second Division on my right attacked in force, and soon gained possession of the fortifications in its front. Observing this attack, the dismounted regiments were immediately advanced, and when the Second Division obtained possession of the outer works, the Fourth Cavalry, which had not yet left their horses, came forward at a gallop in column of fours, and at once pushed into the city, companies going in various directions to complete the discomfiture of the enemy. About this time the Third Iowa and Tenth Missouri were directed to remount, but the road being blocked by subsequent movements this was not fully accomplished until a late hour. . . . The mounted companies secured four guns, three stands of colors and about one thousand prisoners; several hundred of the enemy were killed and wounded and many were drowned in attempting to escape. . . . April 3d, by direction of Brevet Major General Wilson, I assumed command of the city, while my brigade, Colonel Noble commanding, made a march to the rear, through Summerfield to Johnson's Ferry, returning on the 6th inst. With the army this brigade moved from Selma, April 10th, arriving at Montgomery on the 12th, near which city we remained until the 14th.

Major Curkendall, with six companies of the Third Iowa Cavalry, was here detailed as provost guard, and did not rejoin the command until after the capture of Columbus. . . . This brigade reached the point of attack before Columbus about 7:30 P. M., and at 8 o'clock was disposed in the following order: Six companies of Third Iowa Cavalry, Colonel Noble commanding, dismounted in line at right angles to the Somerville road, with the left resting thereon, two hundred yards from one line of the enemy immediately in front and about two hundred and fifty yards from the main line on our left; the latter formed behind fortifications running parallel with the Somerville road; the Tenth Missouri Cavalry, Lieutenant Colonel F. W. Benteen commanding, on the Somerville road, four hundred yards in rear of the Third Iowa, in column of fours mounted, and the Fourth Iowa, Lieutenant Colonel John H. Peters commanding, in the same order, on a by-road three hundred yards from the point of its intersection with the Somerville road, being thus to the right and rear of the Third Iowa two hundred yards.

The moment we were ready to attack, the enemy opened fire in front with small arms, and on the left with shell, canister and musketry, when the Third Iowa was directed to charge, and in five minutes we were in possession of the rifle pits in our front. Supposing the captured works to be a portion of the enemy's main line, the Tenth Missouri Cavalry was ordered forward at a gallop, and two companies pushed at once for the bridge, nearly three-fourths of a mile distant, securing it, with about fifty prisoners. This detachment passed in front and to the rear of the enemy's line unhurt, but the officer, Captain R. B. McGlasson, finding his position untenable, released his prisoners and rejoined his regiment with loss of one man killed. When this regiment commenced its forward movement as the enemy developed his main line on our left, the Third Iowa was immediately directed to charge this other position, and this gallant regiment pressed forward vigorously, Captains McKee and Wilson with about fifty men penetrating the line, capturing some prisoners and holding the position. . . . The Fourth Iowa, which was now immediately in front of the enemy's lines, was dismounted, except four companies, and, in charge of Captain Abraham, Company D, were pushed into the enemy's works near where the detachment of the Third Iowa had secured a lodgment. In obedience to instructions, when inside the works Captain Abraham moved directly toward the bridge, not stopping to secure the prisoners, who, after being made to throw away their arms, were left where found. Near the end of this line of rifle pits was a work with six 12-pound Howitzers, which Captain Abraham at once assaulted, capturing the garrison and armament together with four 10-pound Parrott guns, gunners and caissons, which were in position and firing near this fort. Without halting, a portion of his command rushed over the bridge (a covered one), capturing two 12-pound Howitzers, caissons, etc., on the east end. These two guns were loaded with canister, but the gunners could not fire without killing the rebels flying over the bridge with our men. The capture of this bridge was in itself a great victory, as it had been fully prepared for sudden and complete destruction. The enemy were unable to fire this structure, which, being saved, enabled our forces to occupy Columbus and march immediately upon Macon. Any delay at the Chattahoochee would have prevented our forces reaching Macon before the armistice went into effect. The capture of Columbus involved the fall of Macon. . . . There have been very many instances of individual heroism, while almost every one did all he could. If in this report some persons seem to have done more than well, it must not be inferred that others would not have done equally well if they had been fortunate in securing opportunities.

During the campaign this brigade has taken in action three thousand one hundred prisoners, including two hundred commissioned officers, eleven stands of colors, thirty-three guns, twenty-five caissons, three thousand five hundred stands of arms, and a large number of horses, wagons and mules. . . . As a testimony of my respect and appreciation of their ability and services, and because of gallantry in presence of the enemy, I respectfully recommend as follows: That the rank of Major by Brevet be conferred upon the following named officers: . . . John D. Brown, Captain Company L, Third Iowa Cavalry. This officer was wounded severely in the battle of Big Blue, Mo., October 23, 1864; he has twice, on the present expedition, attacked, with his company, a force of the enemy greater than his own, and each time completely routed him, once capturing more than his own command numbered.—George W. Johnson, Captain Company M, Third Iowa Cavalry. This officer, once with two and again with one company, charged a superior force of the enemy with great gallantry, routing them each time, and killing, wounding, and capturing quite a number. His courage, good conduct and gallantry have been frequently observed. . . . Samuel J. McKee, Captain Company B, Third Iowa Cavalry. This officer has several times led his company gallantly, and was the first officer to enter the lines of the enemy at Columbus, himself and men having to work their way through an abatis in presence of the enemy, securely posted behind intrenchments, and only a few yards distant. With two companies he met and repulsed the enemy at Fike's Ferry, Cahawba River, killing and wounding some, and capturing thirty animals. . . .

Your obedient servant,

E. F. WINSLOW,

Brevet Brigadier General, Commanding.

The regiment marched with its brigade and division from Columbus to Macon, arriving at the latter place just after the rebel forces which had occupied it had surrendered unconditionally. The war was now practically ended, but the services of the Union troops could not at once be dispensed with. The rebel soldiers, having been paroled, were rapidly returning to their homes. The country was in a state of destitution, the civil authorities incapable of exercising proper control, and it was necessary, for the preservation of order and the protection of life and property, that the military power should be exercised for a considerable length of time. Early in May the regiment with its brigade and division proceeded to Atlanta, where headquarters were established, but detachments were sent into the surrounding country. The duty was irksome and the men were anxious to return to their homes, but it was late in the summer before their services could be safely dispensed with. On the 2d of August orders were received directing the assembling of the Third and Fourth Regiments of Iowa Cavalry at Atlanta for the purpose of being mustered out of the service. On the 9th day of August, 1865, the Third Iowa Veteran Cavalry was formally mustered out of the service of the United States, at Atlanta, Ga. It was soon after provided with transportation to Davenport, Iowa, and, upon reaching that place, the regiment was disbanded and the men departed for their homes.

In the long list of Iowa regiments, the outlines of whose history the compiler of this sketch has attempted to describe not one has been found to surpass the glorious record of patriotic service rendered by the Third Cavalry. Its full and complete history would occupy a volume larger than that which contains this brief and imperfect sketch. Not many of those who marched, fought and suffered in its ranks remain upon earth, but to those who may live to peruse what is here written will come the assurance that the State, which sent them forth in the strength of their young manhood, to fight the battles of their country, has made such provision as was possible to perpetuate the memory of each brave and faithful soldier of the old regiment. These men of the Third Iowa Cavalry have left the impress of their lives upon the history of their State and Nation, not only as brave soldiers in time of war but as good citizens in every honorable avocation of life. Some of their number have been highly honored since the close of the war, and have achieved fame and distinction in the high places to which they have been assigned, but, to each one who faithfully served his country in her hour of greatest need, posterity owes a debt of gratitude which can never be fully repaid.²⁹

²⁹It is a remarkable fact that, at the time this historical sketch was completed (July 1, 1909), the three men who had served as Colonels of the regiment—Bussey, Caldwell and Noble—were still living, and that all three had been honored with commissions by Benjamin Harrison, President of the United States—Caldwell, as Judge of the United States Court of Appeals; Noble, as Secretary of the Department of the Interior, and Bussey, as Assistant Secretary of the same Department.

[From the time the Third and Fourth Iowa Cavalry were assigned to the same brigade, at Helena, Ark., in the winter of 1862, until the close of the war, the history of the two regiments is closely identified. For the greater part of that period they marched and fought together, and re-enlisted about the same time as "Veteran Volunteers." Their dead, and those of the enemy they encountered, lie upon many battlefields, from the plains of Kansas to the mountains of Georgia. The historical sketches of the operations of each of these regiments for the period mentioned will, therefore, be found largely of the same general character, as they were compiled from the official reports of the officers of each regiment, who were so often associated in the same expeditions and engagements.]

Fourth Regiment

Iowa Volunteer Cavalry

HISTORICAL SKETCH

FOURTH REGIMENT IOWA VOLUNTEER CAVALRY

The Fourth Regiment of Iowa Cavalry was organized under the proclamation of President Lincoln, dated July 23, 1861. The original roster of the regiment shows that the twelve companies of which it was composed were ordered into quarters by Governor Kirkwood, on dates ranging from August 26 to November 2, 1861. The place of rendezvous designated in the order was Mount Pleasant, Iowa, where the companies were mustered into the service of the United States by Captain Alexander Chambers, of the United States Army, on dates ranging from November 23, 1861, to January 1, 1862.¹ Most of these companies had perfected their organization and were awaiting assignment when the Governor's order was issued, but some of them had only an incipient organization at that time, hence the disparity in the dates upon which they were mustered into the service. Upon the date of the muster of the last company, the regiment numbered 1,086 men and officers. The camp was named "Camp Harlan," in honor of the distinguished Senator from Iowa, whose home was in Mount Pleasant. Barracks were erected for the use of the men and officers, and stables for the horses.

The subjoined roster gives the names of the field, staff and line officers, as well as that of each enlisted man, at the time the organization was completed, and, opposite the name of each, appears his personal record of service, in so far as the same could be found by a careful search of the official records. However, it is more than possible that, in some instances, individual records may be found to be incomplete or incorrect. In such cases the fault must be charged to the official records, and inability to obtain fuller information from the War Department, at Washington, and not to those who made the transcripts. A painstaking effort was made some years ago by William F. Scott, late Adjutant of the Fourth Iowa Cavalry, to compile a correct roster and record of the regiment.² In his preface to the work, Adjutant Scott says: "The history given is that of the original records, supplemented by papers of my own and of other officers and soldiers, all verified with much care. But the great number of errors and contradictions found and traced to explanation makes it probable that many others remain hidden. I can only say that the work is as nearly correct as it could well be made, and certainly more nearly correct than the official records."

While this compilation, like that of every other Iowa military organization embraced in this work, is made from the official records, the completed roster has been carefully compared with that to which reference has been made, for the purpose of verification and the clearing up of records which would otherwise have remained more or less obscure and incomplete. The Fourth Iowa Cavalry is more fortunate in this regard than any other Iowa regiment, the history referred to being contained in a large volume of over six hundred pages and describing with great particularity all the movements and operations of the regiment during its long term of service. The compiler of this historical sketch is confronted with the difficult task of condensation, and cannot therefore attempt to include in this brief history anything more than the outlines of the most important events connected with the service of the regiment, but, in the arrangement of the roster which follows, he hopes and believes the chief merits of the work will be found.

Only a few of the officers and men of the regiment had the benefit of previous military training or experience. Colonel A. B. Porter, Major George A. Stone and Adjutant George W. Waldron had been officers in the First Iowa Infantry and had fought in the battle of Wilson's Creek, as had also a number of the enlisted men of the different companies; but this experience, except in so far as having been under fire was of benefit to them, availed but little, because they had no knowledge of the duties of cavalry soldiers. Lieutenant Colonel Thomas Drummond was the notable exception in this regard, he having been a lieutenant in the Fifth United States Cavalry. Upon joining the regiment he became its instructor in tactics and discipline. He was a man of excellent ability, but somewhat imperious in his manner and bearing, and perhaps over zealous in his efforts to bring the regiment up to a state of efficiency in drill and discipline before it was called upon to take the field.³ The regiment remained at Camp Harlan until the latter part of February, when it was transported by rail to St. Louis and thence to Benton Barracks. Horses of an excellent quality had been supplied before leaving Iowa, but the regiment was otherwise only partially equipped when it reached Benton Barracks. There its equipment was completed, but the quality of arms with which it was at first supplied was poor. It was a long time before a better quality of arms could be furnished.

On the 10th of March, 1862, Colonel Porter received orders to move his regiment by rail to Rolla, Mo. Upon its arrival there a detail of forty men, under command of First Lieutenant John Guylee, of Company A, was sent to guard a party of paymasters going to pay the troops of the Army of the Southwest. The detachment was joined by a larger force of cavalry at Lebanon and successfully performed its duty as escort, reaching the army at Pea Ridge on March 26th, and then countermarched to Springfield, where it awaited the arrival of the regiment. The regiment marched from Rolla to Springfield and went into camp there, where it remained about three weeks. On April 14th the regiment marched south and, on the 16th, joined the army under General Curtis, at Forsyth. On April 19th a scouting detachment of the regiment, under command of Lieutenant William A. Heacock, came into conflict with a party of the enemy at Talbot's Ferry, Ark., and, in the skirmish which ensued, Lieutenant Heacock was killed—the first man of the regiment to meet death at the hands of the enemy. The army moved eastward to West Plains. There was much sickness in the regiment, and there were a number of deaths, while others became incapacitated for further duty and were subsequently discharged. It was the usual experience of new regiments in the field. The hardships and exposure to which the men were subjected caused more deaths and disabled more men than the conflicts with the enemy. From West Plains the army moved to Batesville, the cavalry scouting the country on the flanks and rear. On June 3d, Company C, under command of Captain Porter, came into contact with a force of rebel cavalry and, in the skirmish, Corporals Butcher and Browning were wounded and, with private Murdock, captured. They were confined at Little Rock until August, when they were exchanged.

³Lieutenant Colonel Drummond went into the field with the regiment, but, after a few months, resigned and returned to his former position in the Fifth United States Cavalry. He was killed while gallantly leading his men in a charge at the battle of Five Forks, April 1, 1865.

On June 24th the army took up the line of march for Helena. Company F, of the Fourth Iowa Cavalry, under command of Captain Winslow, had been detached from the regiment about the middle of May and was acting under the orders of Captain Banning, the Chief Commissary of the army, who was actively employed in gathering provisions from the surrounding country and in guarding the commissary trains and the mills which were grinding grain into flour and meal for the use of the army. Captain Winslow's company captured a steamboat loaded with sugar and molasses. The company also brought in about one hundred wagons loaded with provisions. Thus far his company had sustained no casualties in making these important captures, but, on the 7th of June, it came into contact with a party of rebels and Corporal John G. Carson was mortally wounded. On the 14th of July, twelve men of Captain Winslow's company were foraging under command of Sergeant Curtiss. While loading their wagons at Gist's plantation, twenty miles from Helena, they were attacked by a force of one hundred rebel cavalry. Curtiss lost one man killed and five wounded from his little detachment. The wounded men were captured. Captain Winslow, hearing the firing, galloped with the rest of his company to the rescue, overtook and attacked the rebels and recaptured one of the wounded and all the wagons. The wounded prisoners were subsequently paroled.

The movement of the army was very slow, owing to the intense heat, the necessity for constant foraging to obtain provisions, the large number of sick in wagons and ambulances, and the blocking of the roads by the enemy placing obstructions which it took much time to remove. There was also considerable fighting by the troops which led the advance. The Fourth Iowa Cavalry was assigned to the rear guard. Finally, the long march and the end of the campaign was reached when the army arrived at Helena, July 12, 1862.

The regiment remained in camp at Helena for over eight months. During this period it was engaged in scouting the surrounding country, watching the movements of the enemy and guarding the approaches to that important post, which was many times threatened with attack. The troops composing the defensive force at Helena consisted of three regiments of infantry, one battery, and the Fourth Iowa Cavalry, all under the command of Colonel William Vandever, of the Ninth Iowa Infantry, an able officer who had won distinction at the battle of Pea Ridge. Company F, under command of Captain Winslow, was assigned to special service as provost guards and other duties at headquarters in the town, and did not rejoin the regiment until it left Helena. The camp of the Fourth Iowa Cavalry was outside the town, about four miles on the Little Rock road, constituting an outpost for the defensive works and the garrison, hence its duties were of the utmost importance, as it would be the first to meet the enemy in case of an attack in force. The most constant vigilance was therefore necessary, and was maintained. The details for picket duty each day were heavy, and scouting parties were sent out in advance of the picket lines to guard against the possibility of a surprise. Small scouting parties of the enemy were observed from time to time, but no conflict which involved loss to the regiment occurred until September 20th, when a detail of eight men, of Company D, met a superior force of the enemy and, in the flight which ensued, the detachment lost one man killed, one wounded and three captured, the remaining four, escaping, returned to camp, and a detachment was at once sent in pursuit of the rebels, but did not succeed in overtaking them. On September 30th, two men, of Company M, were captured. These men, and those captured on the 20th, were exchanged and returned to the regiment in November, 1862.

About the 1st of October General Vandever and his infantry troops left Helena, and a considerably smaller force was sent to succeed them as a garrison for the post. The camp of the Fourth Iowa Cavalry was then moved two miles nearer Helena, on the Little Rock road, and two other cavalry regiments—the Ninth Illinois and the Fifth Kansas—were encamped near them. On the morning of the 11th of October a detachment of fifty men of the Fourth Iowa was sent out on a scout, under the command of Major Rector, and proceeded about fifteen miles without meeting the enemy, but late in the afternoon, when marching through a lane, within three miles of camp, it was suddenly attacked from the rear by a superior force of rebels. Although placed at a great disadvantage—his men being thrown into confusion by the sudden and unexpected attack—the gallant Major Rector succeeded in rallying his men and resisted the attack in his front, but a portion of the enemy had made a detour and, coming from the opposite direction, the detachment found itself attacked from all sides and was compelled to cut its way out, which it did after losing twenty-one of its number in killed, wounded and captured. Major Rector was among the captured. Lieutenant George B. Parsons, of Company B, had also been sent on a scout with forty of his company the same morning, and was returning to camp when he heard the firing of the enemy's and Major Rector's men, and, moving promptly to the place where the fighting was going on, he boldly charged the enemy, killing and wounding a number of them and capturing twelve prisoners, among whom was Lieutenant Colonel Giddings of the Twenty-first Texas Cavalry, who was in command of the rebel force. In this charge Lieutenant Parsons lost two men captured and four wounded, and was himself wounded. The regiment went in pursuit of the rebels, but did not overtake them. The captured men were paroled and returned to the regiment and, a couple of months later, were exchanged and restored to duty. Lieutenant Parsons was very highly commended for his prompt action and the personal gallantry he displayed in the engagement. He was subsequently promoted to Captain of his company.

On the 8th of November, Captain John H. Peters of Company B, with a detachment of 100 men from different companies of the regiment, was leading the advance of a column of 600 cavalry, which was part of a reconnoitering expedition under command of Colonel Vandever, when he received orders to charge a force of rebels who held the road upon which the column was marching. He promptly charged the enemy who fled after but slight resistance. His loss in the charge was 3 men wounded. Later on, the same day, his detachment was suddenly attacked by a larger force of the enemy. Captain Peters promptly charged again, this time losing 19 wounded. Among those wounded in this charge were Captain Peters, Lieutenants Beckwith, Tucker, Fitch and Groesbeck, and Corporal Charles W. Sisson, who subsequently died from the effect of his wound. The enemy's loss in these two engagements was 17 killed, 14 captured and many wounded, the total number not known. Captain Peters and his command were highly commended for their gallantry. Two officers—a Major and a Captain—were among the prisoners captured from the enemy.

On the 18th of November the regiment started from Helena, with the cavalry force under the command of Colonel Bussey of the Third Iowa Cavalry, which was to co-operate with the infantry under General A. P. Hovey, in an expedition having for its object the capture of Arkansas Post—a strong and important rebel fortification on the Arkansas River. The troops suffered very great hardships upon this expedition, which was finally abandoned on account of the impassable condition of the roads, and—on account of low water—the failure of the transports which carried the infantry to proceed to the point where the two forces were to have joined. On the 25th of November the troops reached Helena, on their return from this unfortunate march. On the next day after its return, the regiment was ordered to march with another expeditionary force, under General A. P. Hovey. This force landed at Friars' Point, Miss., a few miles below Helena, and marched toward Grenada, the cavalry keeping well in advance. Destroying a considerable amount of railroad track near Coffeeville, it moved on to Panola and destroyed the railroad at and near that place, thus inflicting great damage upon the enemy's line of transportation. Many horses were also captured, and several hundred negro men returned with the expedition and were afterwards enlisted in one of the colored regiments whose organization was authorized about that time. The entire march occupied but seven days. Upon its return to Helena, the camp of the regiment was moved near the river to a low and unhealthy situation, resulting in much sickness, which proved fatal to many. Among those who died there were Major Benjamin Rector and Captain Thomas C. Tullis. The reason for the change in location of camps was the necessity for contracting the lines nearer the post, on account of the smaller garrison then occupying it; but the danger from attack by the enemy was not so great as that incurred from disease, and, after much insistence, the commanding officer of the post permitted the regiment to move its camp to higher ground much farther away from the fortifications. The result of the change was soon apparent in a decreasing sick list. The reduction of the force imposed heavy work upon the cavalry, from whose camps, at some distance from the town, all the advanced picket posts and details for scouting were furnished.

On the 8th of March a detachment of the regiment, under command of Major Spearman, had a skirmish with the enemy at Big Creek, ten miles west of Helena, in which private Benoni F. Kellogg, of Company L, was killed. Early in April a detachment of the Fourth Iowa Cavalry, under command of Major Winslow, participated in an expedition against a force of rebels encamped at Wittsburg, on the St. Francis River, about one hundred miles northwest from Helena. On the 8th of April the enemy was encountered near Wittsburg and, after a brief but hard fought engagement, was defeated. The loss of the Fourth Iowa Cavalry in this fight was one man killed and seven wounded, all of Company L, which was at the front and charged the enemy, who made the attack from ambush after dark. This was the last fighting in which any of the regiment took part during the remainder of its stay at Helena.

On the 29th of April, 1863, the Fourth Iowa Cavalry—Lieutenant Colonel Swan in command—embarked on steamboats at Helena and, on the next day, landed at Milliken's Bend. From the 30th day of April to the close of the Vicksburg campaign, on the 16th of July, the regiment performed very active and arduous service. Only a brief description can be given of its most important operations during this remarkable period in the history of the war. During the investment of Vicksburg the movements of the regiment covered the country in the rear of that stronghold, embracing the territory between the Big Black, the Mississippi and the Yazoo Rivers. Its principal encounters with the enemy were as follows: On the morning of May 12th, the Second Battalion, under command of Major Winslow, while leading the advance of Sherman's column was engaged in a skirmish with the enemy, in which it lost one man killed, three men wounded, and had four horses killed. Major Winslow's horse was killed, and he barely escaped being killed by being caught under the horse as it fell. It was here that Major Winslow first came under the observation of General Sherman, who had ridden to the front and was a personal witness of the gallant conduct of the Major and his battalion. The next engagements were on May 13th and 14th, when the Fourth Iowa Cavalry, under the personal direction of General Sherman, engaged in successful flanking movements, which caused the enemy to retreat into and through the city of Jackson and resulted in the capture of the city, with a loss to the enemy of 845 killed, wounded and captured, while the loss in General Sherman's army was 42 killed and 258 wounded.¹

On the 16th of May the Fourth Iowa Cavalry marched from Jackson in the rear of General Sherman's army. It was held within sight of the battle of Champion's Hill, awaiting orders, but did not become engaged. It was sent upon a reconnaissance to Brownsville the next day and had a slight skirmish with the enemy's cavalry but suffered no casualties, the enemy retreating rapidly through the village. The regiment returned to the rear of the army.

On the 18th of May, Lieutenant Colonel Swan was ordered to move rapidly in the direction of Haynes' Bluff and reconnoiter that fortified position for the purpose of ascertaining whether it was still occupied by the enemy. Early in the afternoon the advance guard of the regiment came within sight of the works, and continued to advance cautiously; but not encountering opposition, Captain Peters with his company was ordered to move forward for closer observation, and, meeting with no enemy, he rode into the fort and found but twenty of the enemy, who surrendered without resistance. The strongly fortified position had been hastily evacuated. Captain Peters at once got into communication with Admiral Porter, whose fleet of gunboats was lying in the Yazoo River, below, out of range of the guns of the fort, and a detachment of marines was landed, under command of Lieutenant Walker, to whom Captain Peters turned over the fort and prisoners. Captain Peters moved on to the fortifications at Snyder's Bluff, which he found had also been abandoned by the enemy. That night the regiment bivouacked in the rear of McPherson's Corps and remained in that temporary camp for several days, sending out scouting and reconnoitering detachments to observe the movements of the enemy. The camp was afterwards moved to a fine location in the rear of General Sherman's position. The effective force of the regiment was constantly drawn upon for scouting duty, and most of the men and officers were in the saddle during the day and, many times, far into the night. This incessant service told severely upon both men and horses, and the effective strength of the regiment became fearfully reduced as the days wore on, both men and horses breaking down when the limit of physical endurance was reached. In the performance of these duties several conflicts with the enemy occurred.

On the 24th of May, near Mechanicsburg, a large detachment of the regiment, under Major Parkell, joined with detachments of other cavalry, all under command of Lieutenant Colonel Swan, met a similar force of the enemy and, in the skirmish, the Fourth Iowa had one man wounded and one horse killed. On May 29th, near the same place, Major Parkell, in command of all the effective force of the regiment, had quite a serious engagement with the enemy, in which he had one officer and six men wounded. Major Winslow, whose battalion was supporting the artillery, was wounded in the leg by a piece of shell, and, though he continued on duty, suffered from the wound for many months. On the 22d of June, a detachment of the regiment, composed of 30 men each from companies A, F, I and K, 120 men and officers, under command of Major Parkell, was sent to blockade the road near the Bear Creek ford, by felling trees, and thus delay the expected advance of the enemy. While engaged in this work the pickets which had been posted were attacked, and those who were not killed, wounded or captured, were rapidly driven in, and Major Parkell found himself and his small command confronted with an overpowering force of the enemy. He made a most gallant resistance, but his valor and that of his men and officers could not prevail against such tremendous odds, and he was compelled to retreat, with a loss of more than one-half of the detachment. The pursuit was not long continued. The commanding officer of the rebel force, naturally expecting that reinforcements would be encountered, soon halted and retreated with his prisoners. The loss of Major Parkell's detachment was 8 killed, 17 wounded and 36 captured. The enemy left 15 men dead upon the field, and one officer, a Major, mortally wounded, who was evidently supposed to be killed, as they carried off the rest of their wounded. Their total loss could not, therefore, be ascertained, but it no doubt reached, if it did not exceed, that of the Fourth Iowa Cavalry, except in prisoners. Upon learning of the attack, the remainder of the regiment was quickly mounted and hurried to the relief of their comrades, but was not able to overtake the rebels before they had reached the lines of their own army. The division commander was justly criticised for sending so small a force so far in advance of the Union lines, without adequate support being provided, in case of attack. Lieutenant Joshua Gardner and Sergeant William T. Biggs died from the effect of wounds received in this engagement. All of the captured were exchanged and returned to the regiment in October, except Lieutenant William J. McConnelle, who remained in prison a long time and was finally exchanged and discharged without returning to the regiment, and Private James A. Livingston, who was reported as having died of his wounds in prison.

On the 20th of June, 1863, Major Winslow was promoted to Colonel of the regiment, succeeding Colonel Porter, who had resigned on account of ill health. Upon assuming command of the regiment, Colonel Winslow proceeded with great energy to improve its condition in the matter of a more strict enforcement of discipline and in other respects. He had secured the confidence and respect of the men and officers, and his efforts to improve upon the methods of those who had preceded him in command of the regiment were appreciated by all. They were now thoroughly seasoned soldiers and comprehended the absolute necessity for a more strict and impartial enforcement of discipline. Had this feeling been shown at an earlier period, Lieutenant Colonel Drummond would most likely not have resigned on account of the difference of opinion between Colonel Porter and himself as to the proper discharge of the duties of the commander of the regiment. The experience of the Fourth Iowa Cavalry was not greatly unlike that of other volunteer organizations. It generally took a long time for the men to discover that implicit obedience to orders constitutes the first duty of a soldier, and also to discover those among their officers who were best fitted not only to command them in time of battle but to best care for them upon the march, in camp and under all conditions of the service. For this reason the early commanders of regiments met with greater difficulties than those who succeeded them, and they were often subjected to unjust criticism—at least this was true with reference to a majority of them.

Immediately after the surrender of Vicksburg, on the 4th of July, 1863, General Sherman's army moved against the rebel army, commanded by General Johnston. On the morning of July 5th, Sherman's infantry were upon the march towards Jackson. A cavalry brigade, composed of the Third and Fourth Iowa, Second Wisconsin and Fifth Illinois, under command of Colonel Cyrus Bussey, of the Third Iowa, crossed the Big Black River at Messinger's Ferry, and at once took the advance of the army on the road to Jackson. From the morning of the 6th to the 11th of July, Colonel Bussey's command was constantly at the front, had numerous skirmishes with the enemy and rendered valuable assistance to General Sherman in driving the rebel army into intrenchments at Jackson, and in subsequent operations during the 13th of July, which followed, ending in the evacuation of the rebels by Johnston on the 19th.

17th, and his retreat across Pearl River. While the siege was in progress, Bussey's cavalry had been active, and, in obedience to orders from General Sherman, proceeded to destroy a portion of the railroad immediately to the north of Jackson, then marched towards Canton, twenty-five miles farther to the north, and, in conjunction with a force of infantry and artillery, engaged the enemy, driving him into Canton on the night of July 17th. That night the enemy evacuated Canton, and the next morning Colonel Bussey marched into the town with his command, and proceeded to destroy factories and machine shops which had been engaged in the manufacture of equipments for the rebel army, also cars and locomotives which had been used by the rebels in transporting supplies for their army. Immediately after entering Canton, Colonel Bussey had ordered the Fourth Iowa Cavalry to march rapidly to the Big Black River and destroy the long railroad bridge and a mile of trestle work, together with the railroad property at Way's Bluff. The regiment promptly executed this order, meeting with no resistance from the enemy, and rejoined the command that night. Colonel Bussey then marched from Canton to Messinger's Ferry and went into camp. The Fourth Iowa Cavalry's camp was located upon the Flower's plantation, a beautiful place, surrounded by a luxuriant growth of trees, shrubbery and flowers, where it remained about three months. Notwithstanding the beauty of the location, the semi-tropic climate was unhealthful for these men who had been reared in the north, and there was much sickness in the regiment.

Upon his return from Jackson, General Sherman had established his headquarters about a mile north of the camp of the Fourth Iowa Cavalry, and an acquaintance was formed between the General and Colonel Winslow, which grew into a warm personal friendship. From the day (May 12, 1863) that General Sherman had been a personal witness of the gallantry and coolness of Winslow under the fire of the enemy, and the skill with which he handled his men, he had kept him in mind as an officer who would deserve promotion. Closer observation had confirmed the General's first estimate, and he determined to organize an independent Cavalry Brigade and to place Colonel Winslow in command of it. General Sherman had planned an important and hazardous expedition, the successful execution of which would inflict heavy damage upon the enemy, but would require the exercise of great skill and good judgment on the part of the officer who should be selected to command it. General Grant approved the plan, leaving all the details for its execution to be arranged by Sherman. In his letter of instructions to Colonel Winslow, General Sherman states that there was a large amount of rolling stock—70 locomotives and 500 cars—on the Great Central Railroad, between and at Water Valley and Grenada, to be moved, if possible, to and above Grenada and thence to Memphis. He also states that General Grant had ordered a cavalry force to proceed from Memphis to Grenada and to co-operate with the force under Colonel Winslow in carrying out these instructions. In an expedition of this kind it was of course necessary to invest the commanding officer with authority to act upon his own judgment, but he was to carry out his instructions, in so far as it was possible to do so, and to use his own discretion as circumstances should require. The official report of Colonel Winslow⁵ shows that his instructions were strictly complied with, except in the matter of getting the rolling stock into Memphis, which was found to be impossible. The operations of the regiment and brigade during the expedition are fully described, and with that particularity of detail characteristic of all Colonel Winslow's reports. The compiler regrets that limitation of space will not permit the insertion of the entire report in this sketch. The following extracts will, however, serve to show the indomitable will of the commander, the bravery and good discipline of his officers and men, some of the difficulties encountered and overcome, and the important results achieved:

In accordance with instructions, the forces under my command, consisting of the Third Iowa, Fourth Iowa, and Fifth Illinois Cavalry regiments, eight hundred men, left camp on Big Black River, at 5 o'clock A. M. on the 10th inst. . . . Reached Yazoo City at 8 o'clock on the morning of the 12th inst. The gunboats, transports and troops had left this place early on the 11th inst.⁶ After waiting in bivouac until the morning of the 14th inst., I decided, in opposition to the voices of the officers commanding regiments, to push forward without further delay. . . . We bivouacked at 10 P. M. on Harlan's Creek, thirty miles from Yazoo City and eight miles from Lexington. Entered Lexington at 8 A. M., where the Third Iowa, Major Noble, with Lieutenant Jones, A. A. C. S., was left to procure rations, while the main force pushed forward to Durant, and captured at noon a train of cars just from Grenada. Captain Peters was immediately placed in charge of the engine, and proceeded five miles below Durant, and burned a bridge on the track. I learned that there was one engine and about ten cars below Durant; also, that the railroad bridge over Big Black River had just been repaired, the captured train being the first one ordered over it. Resting until 6 o'clock P. M., when the Third Iowa came up, the column moved to West Station, going into bivouac at 11 P. M., twenty-four miles by way of Durant, and twenty miles direct, from Lexington. At this point some engines and cars were found, and, with the train from Durant, forwarded to Vaiden—twelve miles—arriving at 11 o'clock, 16th inst., when the cavalry was delayed until 5 P. M. to make up trains. Reaching Winona—twelve miles—at day-break on the 17th, it was found that the enemy, who now appeared in front, had destroyed a small bridge above town. I therefore decided to leave the trains, now comprising thirteen engines and sixty cars, and pushed forward into Grenada, where I heard some force of the enemy was posted. I caused to be burned a bridge below West Station, one below Vaiden, and two below and near Winona, that the trains might not be carried off if we should be forced to abandon them temporarily. Under my instructions, I intended to return to Winona, and run the trains to Grenada. . . . Upon arriving at Grenada, I found Lieutenant Colonel Phillips, Ninth Illinois mounted infantry, with two brigades—fifteen hundred men.

Upon learning of the approach of Lieutenant Colonel Phillips' command, the rebel cavalry, stationed at Grenada, had burned two bridges north of that place, thus making it impossible to get the locomotives and cars beyond that point. Those at Grenada were, therefore, destroyed, while those left south of that place were abandoned. Colonel Winslow then assumed command of all the Union forces and proceeded on the march to Memphis, during which he encountered some opposition from the enemy, which he easily overcame, and arrived at Memphis on the 23d of August, 1863, having marched 265 miles. The total casualties were 11 men, killed and wounded. The loss of the enemy, in killed and wounded, was not definitely ascertained, but 55 of their number were captured and paroled. During this expedition the Fourth Iowa Cavalry was commanded by Major Parkell. General Sherman highly commended Colonel Winslow for his successful management of the expedition, in a personal letter, from which the following extracts are taken:

. . . . You did exactly as you were ordered and I am glad to hear of it. I wish now I had ordered you to destroy all cars instead of attempting to save them, but my instructions were based on General Grant's wishes, and I am not a military person. . . . I now assure you of my great respect for you.

⁶According to his instructions, Colonel Winslow was to have returned to Yazoo City from the Commissary of Subsistence at Yazoo City, and to have done so do so compelled him to either return to Yazoo City or to continue his march and take the chances of proceeding to Memphis. He chose the latter course, in opposition to the wishes of the Commissary.

a most promising cavalry officer, and only ask you, in whatever position you may find yourself, to obey orders; and when left to your discretion to do just what your judgment suggests. Only remember that boldness and dash are the characteristics of good cavalry. . . . I will watch your progress always, and wish you to consider me your friend and to call on me freely when you will.' . . .

Among the notable incidents in the history of the regiment was the capture and escape of Private Charles H. Smith, of Company C, afterwards promoted to Sixth Sergeant and, later, to Second Lieutenant of his company. Smith was captured August 18, 1863, near Grenada, Miss. He escaped in the night by eluding the vigilance of his guards, and, after securing the horse of their captain, rode two hundred miles, mostly by night, and, after many thrilling adventures, in several of which he came very near being recaptured, succeeded in reaching the camp of the Second Iowa Cavalry at La Grange, Tenn., and, a few days later, rode the noble horse, which had carried him through so many perils, into the camp of his own regiment at Memphis.

On the 29th of August, 1863, the regiment with its brigade embarked for Vicksburg, where it arrived on the 31st and again went into camp. On the 26th of September, General Sherman issued a General Order, from which the following paragraphs are quoted:

"1. Colonel Winslow will organize a force of about one thousand men, to move via Brownsville, Vernon and Benton, and to return to Yazoo and Mechanicsburg, to start tomorrow evening, special instructions to be given to the Commander, who will report in person to the Commanding General. . . .

5. Colonel Winslow, Fourth Iowa Cavalry, is announced as Chief of Cavalry, and his orders will be obeyed by all the cavalry forces now attached to this command."

A detachment of 300 men of the Fourth Iowa Cavalry, under command of Captain William Pursel, constituted part of the force under Colonel Winslow which moved, as instructed, making a diversion to attract the attention of the enemy from the movement of Sherman's main army, then marching towards Memphis, its real destination being Chattanooga. The cavalry expedition was entirely successful, met with but slight loss and returned to camp with eight prisoners captured in a skirmish with the enemy.⁷ On October 15th, the regiment started on another expedition, under command of Major General McPherson, and, in the five days' march, encountered the enemy several times, losing two men killed and one captured. On the 4th of December, a detachment of 100 men of the regiment, under command of Major Spearman, accompanied a force of cavalry which moved by transports to Natchez and there co-operated with the command of General Gresham on an important expedition. This detachment returned to Vicksburg December 17th. On the 19th of December, a sufficient number of the Fourth Iowa Cavalry had re-enlisted to entitle the regiment to be designated as a Veteran organization. Recruits began to arrive from Iowa about the same time, and the strength of the regiment was increased to nearly three-fourths of the maximum number. New and improved carbines were supplied and, for the first time in its history, the Fourth Iowa Cavalry was completely armed and equipped.

From the 19th of December, 1863, to the 1st of February, 1864, the regiment remained in camp near Vicksburg. On the latter date it moved in advance of General Sherman's army at the commencement of the most remarkable experiment that, up to that time, had been undertaken—the great Meridian Expedition. Upon that expedition General Sherman demonstrated the possibility of a large army cutting loose from its base of supplies and penetrating far into the interior of the enemy's country. Indeed, the success of the Meridian Expedition no doubt led General Sherman to undertake, at a later period, that great and brilliant achievement of his military genius—the march from Atlanta to the sea. As the vanguard of the army, the cavalry brigade, commanded by Colonel Winslow, was kept well to the front. Only the most effective men and horses were sent on this expedition, for the reason that it was expected that both would be subjected to the extreme limit of endurance. The Fourth Iowa Cavalry detachment consisted of 423 picked men and officers, under command of Major Parkell.⁹ The leading events in which the Fourth Iowa participated were, first, at Jackson where, on February 5th, the enemy was met in large force and the cavalry made an impetuous charge in which the Fourth Iowa was conspicuous, and in which one piece of artillery and fifty prisoners were captured. The rebels made a brave fight, under the leadership of General Stephen D. Lee, one of their best officers, but were compelled to retreat, the gallant General and several of his officers barely saving themselves from capture by the fleetness of their horses. At Tunnel Hill, near Meridian, the regiment led the advance in another severe encounter with the enemy, the engagement beginning at sundown and lasting until 9 P. M., the rebels being driven for miles over the hills, and suffering much greater loss than they were able to inflict in a running fight. The regiment was engaged in many lesser conflicts during the expedition, in all of which it was victorious. While the infantry was destroying the railroads at Meridian, the cavalry was scouting the surrounding country and inflicting great damage upon the enemy, by burning bridges and destroying supplies which had been accumulated for the use of the rebel army. Returning by a long circuit to the north, the cavalry arrived at Canton in advance of the army; and, upon the arrival of General Sherman at that point, the Fourth Iowa was selected as his escort to Vicksburg, arriving there on the 28th of February, having been absent 26 days. The distance marched was 450 miles. A large number of recruits had arrived during the absence of the detachment, and the aggregate strength of the regiment was increased to 1,300.

Those who had re-enlisted—about 500—with Colonel Winslow, and as many of the officers as could be spared from duty at the camp, marched to Vicksburg on the 4th of March, and there embarked on the good steamboat "Constitution" and proceeded to Keokuk, Iowa, where they arrived on the 14th, and on the next day each man received a furlough for 30 days, at the end of which time he was to report at Davenport, the place designated as the rendezvous, where the veterans were to reassemble. At the appointed time they all reported to Colonel Winslow and, within forty-eight hours, were again on their way to the South. At St. Louis Colonel Winslow received orders to disembark his men and proceed to Benton Barracks, where they were to be remounted and provided with the necessary equipments to enable them to at once enter upon another vigorous campaign. In three days they were again on their way down the river, with orders to disembark at Memphis. In the meantime, the men who had not re-enlisted and the recruits, remaining in camp at Vicksburg, under the command of Lieutenant Colonel Peters, had been ordered to proceed to Memphis, and there on the 29th of April, 1864, the regiment was again united and assigned to the Second Brigade of the Cavalry Division of the Sixteenth Army Corps. General Grierson was in command of the division and Colonel Winslow was assigned to the command of the Second Brigade.

⁹Report of Adjutant General of Iowa, 1865, Vol. 2, page 571. History of the 90th Regiment during 1864, by A. Dodge, Adjutant.

¹⁰On the 30th of April the regiment, with its brigade and division, marched from Memphis to Bolivar, reaching the latter place on the 4th of May. Finding that the rebel General Forrest had retreated with his forces into Mississippi, General Sturgis, in command of the federal forces, marched in pursuit as far as Ripley, but, failing to overtake the enemy, the expedition was abandoned and the troops returned to Memphis, arriving there on the 12th of May, having marched 250 miles, and suffered great hardship, without accomplishing any important results, which, as will subsequently be shown, was to be the fate of this well-equipped army of 8,000 men while it remained under the command of General Sturgis. On the 29th of May, the Fourth Iowa Cavalry, forming part of a reconnoitering force of 1,500 men, under command of Colonel Winslow, left Memphis at 9 P. M. and proceeded to Hernando, Miss., from whence it returned to Memphis, having been gone 22 hours, and covered a distance of 54 miles, without coming in contact with the enemy.

On June 1st, General Sturgis left Memphis, with his army of 8,000 men and 18 pieces of artillery, and marched south in the direction of Guntown, where the rebel General Forrest had concentrated a strong force, with the intention of moving against Memphis. The strength of this rebel force was variously estimated at between 10,000 to 12,000 effective fighting men, well supplied with artillery, and it was under the command of one of the most daring and skillful officers in the rebel army. Colonel Winslow's Brigade, consisting of the Third and Fourth Iowa and Tenth Missouri Cavalry regiments, and four pieces of artillery, led the advance and, on the evening of the 7th of June, encountered a scouting party of the enemy. In the skirmish which ensued Colonel Winslow lost four men and the rebels left six dead upon the field. The cavalry continued to advance without again encountering the enemy, until the morning of June 10th, when the rebel army, under General Forrest, was found in position at Brice's Cross Roads, six miles from Guntown, where the entire strength of both armies became engaged in a hotly contested battle, which resulted in the complete defeat of General Sturgis and the loss of 2,000 of his army, killed, wounded and captured, nearly all his artillery, and 250 wagons of his supply train. During the progress of the terrible conflict, and amid the horrors of the fearful disaster which followed, the Fourth Iowa behaved with the most determined coolness and obstinate bravery. At the beginning of the fight, Colonel Winslow's Brigade repelled three successive charges of the enemy, and firmly held its ground until twice ordered to retire to make way for the infantry. During the retreat, this brigade maintained its organization fully, and covered the retreat of the army until the enemy abandoned the pursuit, the Third and Fourth Iowa being the extreme rear guard for a great part of the way. The guns of Winslow's Brigade were the first to open upon the enemy, fired the last shot at his advancing columns, and were the only ones brought safely off from that disastrous field. The men were in the saddle 54 consecutive hours, engaged with the enemy the greater part of the time, without feed for their horses or provisions for themselves. When the regiment reached Memphis, on the 14th of June, the men and horses were in a condition of almost complete exhaustion. They had marched 350 miles and had suffered a loss of 2 men killed, 18 wounded, and 3 captured.

Major A. R. Pierce was in command of the regiment on this ill-fated expedition, and describes in his official report, with particularity of detail, all its movements from the time it left Memphis to its return to that place.¹¹ He shows how gallantly the regiment withstood the first attack of the enemy, where Lieutenant Dillon and many of his company were wounded; how the bridge was held until the infantry were given time to cross, and how companies D and G, commanded by Captain Abraham and Lieutenant Keck, held the enemy in check at one of the most critical points on the retreat; how the Third and Fourth Iowa Cavalry continued in the rear, covering the retreat until both men and horses had almost reached the limit of endurance. In concluding his report Major Pierce says:

I should be happy to mention in this report the names of all the officers and men who are entitled to special notice, but, in so doing, I would have to name most of my command. The battalion commanders, Captains Wood, Bee and Abraham, deserve much credit for their personal bravery on the field before the retreat, and the prompt manner in which they handled their commands, in guarding the rear after the retreat began; also Lieutenant Woodruff, Acting Adjutant of the regiment, for his promptness in clearing the bridge over Tishomingo Creek, and removing our horses from immediate danger.

The regiment was allowed but ten days' rest, when it was again upon the march. The army was now under the command of Major General A. J. Smith, a very able and competent officer. The Fourth Iowa was attached to the same brigade with which it had served on the previous expedition, commanded by Colonel Winslow. The army marched south for the purpose of attacking Forrest's command and retrieving the disaster which had been inflicted upon it in the expedition under Sturgis. After a number of skirmishes with the enemy, the regiment with its brigade arrived at Tupelo, in advance of the army, on the 13th of July, at noon, and immediately began to destroy the railroad and the buildings containing supplies for the rebel army. At 4 P. M. of the same day, the cavalry was ordered to proceed to the rear, to defend the train which was in danger of capture. The enemy was driven off and the train safely conducted to Tupelo, but upon reaching that place, near midnight, the regiment and brigade were again sent to the rear, to meet and check the advance of the enemy. After marching about two miles, the enemy was encountered and his further advance checked, the cavalry force holding its position under the fire of the rebel batteries until morning, when it was ordered to retire within the infantry lines, which was done slowly and all the way under fire. The enemy then attacked the infantry, which stood firm, repelled three successive charges, and finally, in turn, charged the rebels along their whole line and drove them from the field. In this battle the rebel forces lost 2,000 men, killed, wounded and prisoners, while the loss to General Smith's army was about 800 in killed and wounded.

The next morning Colonel Winslow's Brigade was again sent to the front to reconnoiter. The enemy was found in strong force, and a movement was made to cut off the brigade from the main body, but, after a severe engagement, it succeeded in again retiring within the infantry lines. A severe general engagement ensued, in which the enemy was again defeated. Later in the day General Smith moved his army northward, the cavalry keeping in the rear, and the Fourth Iowa acting as the extreme rear guard. At Town Creek, five miles from Tupelo, while the column was halted, the enemy in strong force attacked the rear. Colonel Winslow quickly got his brigade in line and successfully resisted the attack until reinforced by the infantry, when the rebel force was driven from the field with heavy loss. This ended the fighting. The enemy had been severely punished and the disasters of the previous expedition had been retrieved. The return march was fraught with much hardship. It was difficult to procure sufficient forage for the horses, and the men were compelled to live upon one-fourth rations; the weather was very warm, but notwithstanding these unfavorable conditions, the regiment completed the march of 400 miles in very good condition. It reached Memphis on the 23d of July. Its loss on this expedition was three men killed, ten wounded and nine captured.¹²

After a brief rest, the regiment was called upon to engage in another expedition. All the cavalry at Memphis had now been consolidated into a cavalry corps, consisting of two divisions; the corps under the command of General Grierson; the First Division commanded by Colonel Hatch of the Second Iowa, and the Second Division commanded by Colonel Winslow of the Fourth Iowa. The strength of the two divisions was about 2,500 each. Eleven companies of the Fourth Iowa—about 650 men and officers—were assigned to Colonel Winslow's Division. The cavalry corps left Memphis on the 3d of August and marched direct to Holly Springs, Miss., from which place it marched south to Tallahatchie River, where it met General Chalmers' brigade of rebel cavalry, posted on the south side of that stream. They had burned the bridge. To reconstruct the bridge, under the fire of the enemy, seemed impossible, but the artillery was brought forward and opened such a hot fire upon the enemy as to render their position untenable. They were soon driven out of range, and the work of rebuilding the bridge was begun and pushed to completion. On the 9th of August the work was done, and the Fourth Iowa was the first regiment to cross the river. The enemy was at once attacked and, after a spirited resistance, retreated to Hurricane Creek, where he made another stand but was again forced to give way. The rebel General Chalmers, who was in command, now retreated to Oxford, followed closely by General Grierson's forces, and was soon driven from that place. Further pursuit was prevented by an order to return to Memphis, for the purpose of engaging in an expedition against the rebel General Price, who was proceeding with his army to again invade the State of Missouri.

In the meantime, the rebel General Forrest had executed a brilliant movement, which most likely also had its influence in causing General Smith to change his plans. Forrest, with 2,000 picked men and horses, had made a detour around General Smith's command and, by a series of forced marches, had succeeded in reaching Memphis, and just before daybreak, on the morning of August 21, 1864, made an impetuous attack upon the troops stationed there, and had reached the heart of the city before the different detachments of Union troops could be rallied for defense. Among these detachments was Company C, of the Fourth Iowa Cavalry, which had been left upon provost guard duty when the regiment left Memphis. This company, under the command of First Lieutenant L. P. Baker, rendered conspicuous service in repelling Forrest's attack and driving his force out of the city, after a severe conflict, in which Lieutenant Baker and several of his men were wounded, the Lieutenant's wound being so severe as to permanently disable him. The regiment reached Memphis on the 30th of August, having marched 350 miles during the expedition.

On the 2d of September, 1864, the men and officers of the Fourth Cavalry who were the most able to endure the hardships of another active campaign, to the number of 525, with the other cavalry regiments composing the command of Colonel Winslow, crossed the river at Memphis, and entered upon the long and arduous march which terminated at Cape Girardeau on the 5th of October. From Cape Girardeau the troops were conveyed by boats to St. Louis, and stopping there only long enough to procure fresh horses and other equipments necessary for the continuation of the campaign, they resumed the march. General Price's rebel army of 20,000 men had now reached Lexington, Mo., and was preparing to move forward to Jefferson City and thence to St. Louis. Recruits were constantly joining his army and the invasion of the State had indeed reached formidable proportions. To meet this invading army there was a force of about 11,000 infantry, under command of Generals A. J. Smith and Joseph A. Mower, and about 6,500 cavalry, under command of Major General Pleasanton, and another force composed of Kansas militia, and other troops under Generals Curtis and Blunt, making in all an army equal if not superior in numbers to that of the daring and reckless rebel invader. It was evident that much hard fighting must ensue before General Price and his army could again be driven out of the State of Missouri. The official reports give all the details of the movements and operations of the cavalry, from the time the march began at St. Louis to the last engagement, resulting in the overwhelming defeat of the rebel army. Marching 360 miles in twelve days, the cavalry first encountered the enemy at Independence, on the 22d of October, and, after two hours of hard fighting, in which the Fourth Iowa bore a most conspicuous part, the enemy was driven from the field, the cavalry following in swift pursuit.¹³

On the 23d of October the rebels made another determined stand and the fighting became desperate. The Fourth Brigade, being in advance, opened the fight, dislodged the first line of the enemy and forced him back upon his reserve. The First Brigade was then ordered up to assist the Fourth, both being under command of Colonel Winslow, who at once ordered a charge along the whole line. After a desperate resistance, the rebel line was broken by the charge and retreated in disorder. The Fourth Iowa was at the front and performed its whole duty in this charge. Colonel Winslow was severely wounded in the leg, but continued in the saddle, directing the movements and encouraging his men until the enemy was in full retreat. To cover the retreat of his main army, General Price formed one brigade in line of battle four miles south of Westport, near which place the forces, under Generals Curtis and Blunt, had attacked the enemy at the same time Colonel Winslow's command had made its charge. The cavalry now charged the rebel brigade—which was endeavoring to cover the retreat—with such vigor that it broke and fled in great confusion, following the retreat of the main rebel army. The cavalry followed in pursuit for four miles, at a gallop, and captured many prisoners. In this charge the Fourth Iowa was so conspicuous that it received the highest commendation from Major Generals Curtis, Pleasanton and Blunt. Price's flying army was closely pursued to the Osage River, where his rear guard was overtaken on October 25th, and routed by a cavalry charge, in which the Fourth Iowa again bore a conspicuous part.

The conditions which now confronted the rebel General Price and his army were desperate. He was a brave man, but he must have realized the hopelessness of further resistance. Nevertheless he resolved to make one more determined stand. He selected a position twenty miles south of the river on the open prairie, and there formed the remnant of his army—about 10,000 men—in full view of the army which was advancing to attack him. The First and Fourth Cavalry Brigades of the Union army were quickly formed for a charge, and moved over the open prairie in full view of the enemy, who stood grimly awaiting the attack. The bugle call for the charge rang out, and the line swept forward. The enemy's cavalry alone met the charge, but fought with great bravery. His infantry had already taken up the line of retreat. The assault of the strong force of Union cavalry could not long be resisted, and the entire rebel line was soon again in retreat, the victorious troopers following rapidly, crushing the rebel lines, capturing artillery and prisoners, and hastening the retreat of the now completely demoralized rebel army across the Mernitorf River, and thence on to the shelter of the Ozark Mountains. In this last charge the Fourth Iowa had the honor of leading and, by its impetuosity, contributed largely to the glorious results. Lieutenant H. W. Curtiss, of Company F, was killed, and Major A. R. Pierce was severely wounded while gallantly charging at the head of the regiment. The result of this victory was a loss to the enemy of 1,000 killed and wounded, 1,000 prisoners (among whom were Generals Marmaduke and Cabel), 8 pieces of artillery, 100 wagons, loaded with provisions and ammunition, and an immense number of small arms. General Price escaped, with a small remnant of his once powerful army. The pursuit was kept up by the cavalry until the enemy had disappeared among the Ozark Mountains. It was impossible to go further in pursuit, as there was no food or forage to be obtained in that desolate country, and the cavalry started on the return march with men and horses nearly worn out. It was now the 8th of November. Snow had fallen, the weather was cold and the men were insufficiently clothed. Intense suffering was endured until November 14th, on which date the column was met by a supply train, which had been sent to its relief, and the men were no longer hungry, although they still suffered much from fatigue and cold weather. At length, after a march of 400 miles, the regiment reached Rolla on the 27th of November. From that point they were conveyed by rail to St. Louis, and, on the 30th of November, were once more in their old quarters at Benton Barracks.¹⁴

In his congratulatory order to the cavalry division, Major General Rosecrans states that its loss during the campaign against Price was 346 in killed, wounded and missing. The loss of the Fourth Iowa Cavalry was 4 killed and 26 wounded; but its loss was far greater than this in the number of men rendered unfit for further service on account of the exposure and hardships to which they were subjected during the campaign. In writing to the Adjutant General of Iowa, under date of December 1, 1864, Colonel Winslow says:

Lieutenant Hodge, Adjutant, is about to send you an account of the operations of the Fourth Iowa Cavalry for this year. While his history will be, without doubt, a truthful statement of the career of the regiment during this the most memorable year of the war, it cannot do justice to the sacrifices, patience, courage, fidelity and patriotism of those soldiers whom I have had the honor to command. No language can describe their sufferings. . . . Four expeditions against Forrest and one against Price bear testimony to the fatigues endured, the dangers encountered, the defeats shared and the victories won. . . . Unlike infantry commands, whose losses are sustained on certain days or in particular battles, far apart, cavalry regiments seldom meet with heavy losses at any one time, but almost every day records the death, wounding or capture of the trooper, in some of the innumerable skirmishes or scouts in which, as the "eyes of the army," cavalry are engaged. While the infantry soldier has his seasons of inactivity and rest, the trooper has no day nor hour which he can call his own, but is aroused at all times and at any moment by the sound of the bugle, calling him to mount and move to the front. . . . Very few appreciate what the cavalry soldier endures or accomplishes for his country, hence I have written the above few words in his behalf.¹⁵

In General Orders No. 6, dated at Fort Scott, Kas., October 26, 1864, General Pleasanton recounts the achievements of his cavalry division, and says this of Winslow's Brigade:

The gallant action of Phillips' Brigade of Missouri cavalry, and Winslow's Brigade, in capturing eight of the enemy's guns, on the Osage, was so distinguished as to draw praise from the enemy. . . . The night fighting of Colonel Winslow on the Big Blue deserves the highest commendation. The regiments of the Fourth Brigade are authorized to place upon their colors "Big Blue" and "Osage."

A few weeks later, when the brigade was about to leave his command, General Pleasanton issued the following order¹⁶:

HEADQUARTERS CAVALRY DIVISION,
WARRENSBURG, MO., November 3, 1861.

GENERAL ORDERS No. 11.

Winslow's Brigade of cavalry being about to leave for another department, Major General commanding takes this occasion not only to express his regrets in separating from such glorious troops, but also to recall more especially than was done in General Orders No. 6, from these headquarters, the splendid manner in which the brigade fought at the Osage, capturing five pieces of artillery from the enemy, with a large number of prisoners, and carrying by a daring charge the most important and conspicuous position on that brilliant field.

By command of Major General Pleasanton.

CLIFFORD THOMPSON, A. A. A. G.

From the time it started on the expedition last described to its return to St. Louis, embracing a period of a little less than three months, the regiment had traveled 1,952 miles, had worn out two sets of horses, had suffered the extremes of intense heat and severe cold, had fought in several engagements, in all of which it was successful, had been an important factor in the almost complete destruction of one of the rebel armies, and the virtual crushing out of the rebellion in that part of the enemy's territory which, thus far, had been the scene of its operations. The original term of service of the regiment had now expired, and those who had not re-enlisted, including also the officers who chose to retire at the close of their three years' service, were sent to Iowa and given the honorable discharge to which they were entitled. They had served their country well and faithfully for three long years, and no just criticism could be made upon their leaving the service at the end of the term for which they had enlisted. The number of men and officers who were mustered out was about 250, part of whom were sent from St. Louis and part from that portion of the regiment that was still at Memphis.

The number of men and officers of the regiment who had remained at Memphis, when their comrades started upon the campaign in Missouri, had been somewhat increased by men who had been sick in hospitals and had recovered and returned to duty, also by those who had returned from furlough, so there were now about the same number in Memphis as there were in St. Louis. They had not been idle. Nearly every day, from early in September to January, those able for duty were either on the picket line, scouting, or engaged in more extended expeditions. On the 14th of December, 1861, a detail of 46 men from Companies A and B of the Fourth Iowa Cavalry, under the command of Captain Eldred Huff, of Company A, was sent upon a scouting expedition, and, when near White's Station, about six miles east of Memphis, was suddenly attacked by a greatly superior force of the enemy's cavalry. After a severe conflict, in which three of his men were killed and eight wounded, the Captain ordered a retreat, during which twenty of his men and himself were overtaken by the enemy and captured. The remainder of the detachment escaped and rode back to Memphis. A larger detachment was immediately sent to the scene of the conflict and endeavored to overtake the enemy, but did not succeed in doing so. The killed and wounded who had been left upon the field were removed to Memphis, the wounded cared for in hospital and the dead buried with the honors of war. Some of the unfortunate captives died in prison, and those who survived the inhuman treatment they received in Andersonville remained prisoners until the end of the war.

¹⁶Report of Adjutant General of Iowa, 1861, Vol. 1, pp. 27-28.

Another expedition, in which 100 men of the Fourth Iowa—under command of Captain Beckwith—participated, left Memphis early in December and was conveyed by transports to a point on the river near which, it was reported, a large quantity of arms and medical stores, belonging to the rebel army, were stored, awaiting transportation, and guarded by but a small force of rebels, who were waiting the arrival of a larger force with wagons to remove the arms and stores to the interior. The camp of the guards was surrounded just at daybreak and, after a brief resistance, they surrendered. One thousand rifles, ammunition for same, besides a large quantity of revolvers, quinine and other medical stores, were captured and, with the prisoners, taken to Memphis. Such captures were of great importance, as the rebels were sorely in need of such supplies, which, on account of the destruction of so many of their factories and the maintenance of a strict blockade along the coasts, they found it very difficult to procure. It is one of the marvels of history that the soldiers of the rebel army, lacking as they did, in the latter days of the war, so many of the supplies necessary for their maintenance, should have been able and willing to prolong the hopeless struggle. They were brave American soldiers, fighting for a cause they thought was just, and the brave men who finally conquered them can well afford to pay tribute to their valor and endurance.

On the 21st of December, 1864, a force of 3,500 cavalry, under command of General Grierson, left Memphis on an expedition through Mississippi to Vicksburg. No artillery and no transportation train accompanied the expedition. All the available men and officers of the Fourth Iowa Cavalry, who had not gone upon the campaign against Price, took part in this expedition, under the command of Lieutenant Colonel Peters, with Major Woods second in command. Colonel Winslow, who had gone back to Memphis after being wounded at the battle of the "Big Blue," in October, had now sufficiently recovered from his wound to be able to resume command of the brigade of which this portion of his regiment formed a part. His report of the operations of the troops under his command shows in detail the great damage inflicted upon the enemy, in the destruction of property, capture of prisoners, arms and ammunition.¹⁷ The entire casualties in General Grierson's command were 120 killed and wounded, and 7 missing, while the enemy's loss was about 200 killed and wounded, 600 prisoners and 5,000 stand of arms, 4,000 of which were new English carbines, intended for the use of General Forrest's army of cavalry. About 800 horses and mules and 1,000 negroes were taken into Vicksburg. The property destroyed was many miles of railroad and telegraph lines, many bridges and railway trestles, 14 locomotives, 95 cars, 300 army wagons, 30 warehouses filled with army stores, cloth and shoe factories employing 500 hands, 500 bales of cotton, tanneries, machine shops, and a large quantity of corn and hogs. Of the wagons captured, about 200 had been taken by Forrest when he defeated the army of Sturgis at the battle of Brice's Cross Roads. The expedition ended at Vicksburg on January 5, 1865, the troops having marched 450 miles, gathering subsistence for themselves and horses in the country through which they passed. The fighting was mainly done by detachments, General Grierson having had his usual good fortune when conducting a raid through the enemy's country, to evade or mislead the enemy and to avoid coming into conflict with any large force; but the minor engagements were numerous, and, in some of them, the fighting was severe, as demonstrated by the aggregate losses on both sides. The entire command returned from Vicksburg by transports, those conveying the troops of Colonel Winslow's Brigade going directly to Louisville, Ky., the camp equipage and men, which had been left at Memphis, having previously been sent to St. Louis and, from there, to Louisville with that part of the regiment which had returned from the campaign against Price.

¹⁷Report of Adjutant General of Iowa, 1865, Vol. 2, pages 1376, 7.

On the 16th of January, 1865, the twelve companies of the Fourth Iowa Cavalry were all in camp together at Louisville. The regiment was under the command of Lieutenant Colonel John H. Peters, and formed a part of the same brigade with which it had served so long, the other regiments being the Third Iowa and Tenth Missouri Cavalry, all under command of Colonel E. F. Winslow of the Fourth Iowa. A strong cavalry corps was now being organized for the purpose of sweeping over that portion of the South in which the remaining rebel forces were being concentrated for the final great struggle of the war. The cavalry corps was under the command of Brevet Major General James H. Wilson, one of the most capable officers in the army, in whom General Grant had great confidence. It comprised all the mounted troops of the Departments of the Ohio, Cumberland and Tennessee, and had an aggregate number of about 30,000 but, for the purpose of this campaign, only the best armed and mounted men were chosen, consisting of about 20,000 men and officers, who had seen much service, and who could be depended upon to fully comply with every order given them and to carry to successful completion the plans of their commander. Winslow's Brigade was one of the best mounted, armed and equipped of any brigade in this great cavalry organization. Just before starting upon this last campaign, the brevet rank of Brigadier General U. S. V. was bestowed upon Colonel Winslow, "for gallantry in the field." The officers and men of the Fourth Iowa Cavalry were highly gratified at this mark of appreciation of the merits of their Colonel and, as a practical evidence of their regard, presented him with an elegant sword and a fine watch.

Before the end of January, the Fourth Division, commanded by Brevet Major General Emory Upton, and to which Winslow's Brigade had been assigned, was ordered to move, by transports, up the Tennessee to Eastport, Miss. Landing there, the troops marched to Chickasaw, Ala., from which place they took up their line of march on the 21st day of March, 1865. From that day to the close of hostilities, and the end of the war, the Fourth Iowa Cavalry was engaged in active operations against the enemy, as shown by the official reports of Lieutenant Colonel Peters, Colonel and Brevet Brigadier General Winslow, and Generals Upton and Wilson.¹⁸ The regiment fought in the following engagements: Montevallo, March 30th; Montevallo, March 31st; Six Mile Creek, March 31st; Ebenezer Church, April 1st; Selma, April 2d; Fike's Ferry, April 8th; Columbus, April 16th; besides numerous minor skirmishes of small detachments. The movements of the brigade, from the time it left Chickasaw, Ala., to its arrival at Macon, Ga., are described in detail in Brevet Brigadier General Winslow's report, while those of the Fourth Iowa are described by Lieutenant Colonel Peters and, from the latter report, the following brief summary is mainly compiled:

On the 21st of March, 1865, the regiment marched from Chickasaw, with 31 officers and 687 enlisted men in the ranks, and 10 officers and 131 enlisted men belonging to the regiment on detached service, making an aggregate of 862.¹⁹ The line of march led over the pine-clad hills of North Alabama. On ¹⁸Report of Adjutant General of Iowa, 1866, pages 133, 312, 127, Vol. 2, 1867, pages 538 to 545.

¹⁹The men and officers on detached service, as stated, consisted mainly of the members of Company G, then present for duty, and detailed to act as escort to Brevet Major General Upton, the commander of the division to which the regiment belonged. It should be here remarked that the duty of the Commanding General's escort is not merely to ride near him for his personal protection. They are required to act as orderlies, in carrying orders to the commanders of brigades and regiments, while in camp, on the march and in battle, and also to act as scouts, and often the officers comprise a portion of the General's Staff. These duties were performed with credit by Company G, of the Fourth Iowa Cavalry, during the whole of the war. It rejoined the regiment at Atlanta only a short time before the close of the war, and was mustered out.

the 30th of March the advance guard, under command of Major Woods, skirmished with the enemy for several miles before reaching Montevallo, losing one man wounded. On March 31st, on the south of Montevallo and near Six Mile Creek, seven companies of the regiment had an encounter with two regiments of the enemy, the remaining companies being at that time the rear guard of the column. The Third Battalion, Major Dee commanding, moved into line and dismounted to meet the attack, and orders were sent to Captain Abraham, commanding First Battalion, to follow, mounted in column of companies. The attack was repulsed and the enemy driven from the field, leaving five men killed and two captured. The loss of the Fourth Iowa was five men wounded. On the 1st of April the regiment, preceded by the Third Iowa Cavalry, arrived on the battleground of Ebenezer Church, just as the enemy was being driven from the field, and joined in the pursuit, but suffered no loss. On April 2d, Companies I, F and L, under command of Major Woods, led the advance at Selma, and charged the enemy at his outer works and drove him into his inner line of works, which they also charged and captured, together with a large number of prisoners and five pieces of artillery. In this charge Captain Eugene R. Jones, of Company I, was killed. The other companies, under command of Lieutenant Colonel Peters, followed, charging through the works and into the city, with a loss of one man killed and eight wounded. In the pursuit which followed, Captain Abraham and his battalion captured four pieces of artillery, three battle flags and two hundred prisoners. The flags were captured by Nicholas Fanning, Company B, Charles Swan, Company K, and James P. Miller, Company D. The Third Battalion, under command of Major Dee, was placed on duty in the city as provost guard, while the First and Second Battalions, under command of Colonel Peters, was sent upon a reconnoitering expedition between the Alabama and Cahawba Rivers, occupying four days, and marching ninety miles.

On April 7th, a detachment of sixty men of the regiment, under command of Lieutenant J. T. Reynolds, had a skirmish with the enemy at Fike's Ferry, in which J. T. Mendenhall, of Company L, was severely wounded in the face, from the effect of which he died a few days later. On the 9th of April, the regiment marched with the army to Montgomery. After a brief engagement outside the works, on April 13th, in which the regiment was not called upon to participate, the city was surrendered. On April 14th, a detachment, under Captain F. S. Whiting, while reconnoitering along the banks of the Coosa River, captured three steamboats, laden with cotton and provisions. They were taken to Montgomery and turned over to the Post Commander. On the 16th of April, the regiment, with its brigade and division, arrived opposite Columbus, Ga. After reaching a point on the extreme left of the enemy's works, and just beyond the range of his artillery, the brigade moved, by a circuitous route, to the front of the enemy's works on the right, and took a position near the main road leading to the only remaining bridge over the Chattahoochee River, and there awaited orders to charge and gain possession of the bridge. Under orders from General Upton, the First Battalion, under Captain Abraham, and the Second, under Captain Dana, were dismounted; and the Third Battalion, under Major Dee, was ordered to remain mounted and await orders. The dismounted column moved down the road and charged the enemy's works, clearing the line, then, turning to the right, moved down the line of intrenchments on the double-quick and charged and captured the principal fort with its garrison of 250 men and 6 guns. A few men were left to hold the fort, and the line pushed forward to the bridge. Sharp fighting took place between the fort and the river, but the enemy was driven across the bridge in great confusion. Our men, mingling in the darkness with the flying enemy, rushed over it and captured two guns, commanding the passage from the east end. The Third Battalion now came up, mounted, and, moving over the bridge, charged through the city after the retreating enemy, capturing a large number of prisoners. First Lieutenant S. N. Miller was the first officer over the bridge, followed closely by Lieutenants S. O. Black and L. H. Dillon. Sergeant Joseph Jones was mortally wounded while gallantly fighting for the guns commanding the passage of the bridge. The guns and gunners were captured and the bridge cleared for the unobstructed passage of the troops. Sergeants Henry C. White, Harry Bodkin, Charles H. Smith, Corporal William McCully, and Privates R. Cosgriff, John Kinney, Martin L. Tucker, John Andrews, Henry Trimble and Joseph Winemiller, were among the first to cross the bridge and to engage in the desperate fight for the possession of the guns. Each one of the following named men captured a battle flag in the engagement at Columbus: Corporal Richard Morgan, Company A; Private Edward J. Bebb, Company D; Sergeant Norman F. Bates, Company E; Private John Hayes, Company F; Private Eli Sherman, Company I; Private R. Cosgriff, Company L; Private John Kinney, Company L. Private Robert C. Wood, of Company A, while acting as orderly, was captured early in the engagement and confined in a house near the bridge. He escaped when the charge was being made, and assisted his comrades in capturing the rebels who had, for a short time, held him as a prisoner. Lieutenant Colonel Peters, near the close of his official report, says:

In thus mentioning the names of officers and men who have taken an active part in the late battles, I fear a wrong impression may be made in regard to all not named; and, in this connection, I desire to say that no single officer, non-commissioned officer or private, so far as I have been able to learn, has failed to do his whole duty and to do it well. If any one has been more prominent than another, it has been on account of his good fortune in having been in the right place at the right time. We have lost no man by straggling from the command during the campaign. The men have taken excellent care of their horses, and have uncomplainingly marched on foot a considerable portion of each day's march, in order to save their horses. They have always exhibited the best of spirits, and have been always eager to meet the enemy. I cannot therefore speak of individual instances of gallantry without feeling that, by implication at least, I am doing injustice to the remainder.

In closing his report, he says:

We marched from Columbus April 18th, and, on the 20th, I was directed to leave the main column at Thomaston, by General Winslow, and proceed to Barnesville and destroy all bridges, culverts, depots, tanks, etc., between Barnesville and Macon. I cut this road at Barnesville and destroyed some distance of track on the evening of the 20th. On the 21st, I reached Forsyth, where I became satisfied that the reported armistice had been actually declared. I thereupon ceased all further destruction of the railroad and marched towards Macon, reaching my present camp about noon of the 22d. Direct line of march of campaign 196 miles. Total number of miles marched 610

In his recapitulation, Lieutenant Colonel Peters gives the names of all the killed and wounded of his regiment during this last campaign of the war. The losses were 3 men killed and 24 wounded. There were 10 horses killed in action and 136 abandoned on the march, and 738 were captured from the enemy. The regiment captured 2,436 prisoners during the campaign, also 21 pieces of artillery and 10 battle flags.

In his official report, General Winslow highly commends the conduct of the officers and men of his old regiment, and makes special recommendation that the brevet rank of Major be conferred upon Captains Lot Abraham and A. B. Fitch, and, that of First Lieutenant, upon Second Lieutenant Loyd H. Dillon, for conspicuous gallantry on the battlefield.

Towards the last of April the regiment, with its brigade, was ordered to move to Atlanta and, on the 9th of May, went into camp at that place. The war was over; but the condition of affairs in almost every portion of the South was such as to render the presence of the federal troops a necessity for a considerable length of time. While the headquarters of the regiment were in Atlanta, and Lieutenant Colonel Peters was assigned to the command of the post, many companies and detachments were kept on duty at out-lying points, where they were mainly occupied in preserving order, protecting property and paroling rebel soldiers. Early in August these companies and detachments were all ordered to return to the regimental camp at Atlanta, and there, on the 8th day of August, 1865, the companies and company officers of the Fourth Regiment of Iowa Veteran Volunteer Cavalry were mustered out of the service of the United States; the Field and Staff were mustered out August 10, 1865. A few days previous to that last important event in its history, the regiment was assembled on parade, with every officer and man present for duty, in the ranks, and, with Colonel and Brevet Brigadier General Winslow in command, the following farewell order was read:

HEADQUARTERS FIRST BRIGADE,
FOURTH DIVISION, CAVALRY CORPS, M. D. M.,
ATLANTA, GA., August 7, 1865.

GENERAL ORDERS

No. 3.

COMRADES: The war is ended. The last order you obey directs your return to your homes. Let your future be as commendable as your past has been glorious. Your career as soldiers is over. You go home as citizens, to reap the reward of your campaigns. Your country will always cherish the memory of her brave defenders.

Seven States have been traversed by your columns. Their soil has been consecrated by the blood of your companions. Your victories will impress their localities on your minds. Though the battles of the war are over, let us recollect that those of our lives continue to the end, that our orders are from Him whose plans are always successful, and that justice is no less a divine attribute than mercy. I shall hear of your behavior in civil life, and believe that you will daily evidence the fact that well-disciplined soldiers can become equally good citizens. During the long period in which I have been associated with you, I have had many occasions to be proud of your conduct, and have often rejoiced that I commanded such brave men.

While I regret to separate from such gallant officers and men, I rejoice with you that our country is intact and united, our government stronger than ever, and that the necessity for our armed service no longer exists. Confident that, when again required, you will be as ready to take the carbine and saber as you now are to abandon them, I part from you with many and sincere wishes for your future prosperity and happiness.

E. F. WINSLOW,
Brevet Brigadier General.

W. BECKWITH, *Captain and A. A. A. G.*²¹

While the regiment had ceased to be a part of the Army of the United States, it was not allowed to disband until it reached Davenport, Iowa, to which place it was ordered to proceed by rail. Owing to the large number of troops which were being transported to their respective States at this time, and to the limited railroad facilities, a full week was occupied on the journey. The regiment reached Davenport August 19th, but it was on the 24th day of August, 1865, that the last pay roll was signed, the last man received his honorable discharge, the regiment disbanded, and the survivors departed for their homes.

²¹Report of Adjutant General of Iowa, 1866, page 119.

The Commonwealth of Iowa has honored itself in making provision for the perpetuation of the memory of its brave sons who went forth at the call of their country and fought, suffered and—alas, how many—died, that the blessings of a free government might be transmitted to their posterity. Among all the records of faithful, loyal and efficient service, contained in the military archives of the State, none are more full and complete, or reflect greater honor upon its history, than that of the Fourth Regiment of Iowa Volunteer Cavalry.

Fifth Regiment

Iowa Volunteer Cavalry

HISTORICAL SKETCH

FIFTH REGIMENT IOWA VOLUNTEER CAVALRY

The cavalry regiment originally known as the "Curtis Horse"—which title was subsequently changed to the "Fifth Iowa Cavalry"—commenced its organization at Benton Barracks, near St. Louis, Mo., on December 20, 1861, pursuant to the following order:

HEADQUARTERS, ST. LOUIS DISTRICT.
St. Louis, Mo., Dec. 20, 1861.

Special Orders
No. 70.

I. Pursuant to Special Order No. 74, of the Department of the Missouri, to carry out special instructions from the Secretary of War, directing the organization of a cavalry regiment to be called the "Curtis Horse," the following detachments and companies are united for that purpose, viz.:

Nebraska Battalion, commanded by Lieutenant Colonel M. T. Patrick—four companies.

Detachment of Iowa and Minnesota troops, known as the command of Captain Schaffer de Boernstein—three companies.

Detachment under same command, twenty-seven men, company of Osage County Mounted Rifles, commanded by Captain Kidd—one company.

Other detachments and companies may be attached hereafter, not to exceed twelve companies.

II. The following field officers are designated, and will be mustered into service, pursuant to order No. 48, War Department, and will be respected and obeyed accordingly: W. W. Lowe, Captain U. S. Army, as Colonel; M. T. Patrick, as Lieutenant Colonel; Carl Schaffer de Boernstein, as Major. The remaining field officers will be appointed upon the completion of the regimental organization; the staff chosen by the field officers and captains of the command, except when otherwise prescribed by law, or by orders of the War Department, relating to military organizations.

By order of BRIGADIER GENERAL CURTIS, Commanding.

N. P. CHIPMAN, Major and A. A. General.

To LIEUTENANT COLONEL PATRICK.¹

Immediately after the issuance of the foregoing order, two companies from Minnesota, under command of Captains A. B. Brackett and D. M. West, and one company of the Irish Dragoons, from Illinois, under command of Captain P. Naughton, were ordered to report for consolidation with the regiment, thus completing its organization. The four companies designated as the Nebraska Battalion were lettered respectively A, B, C and D, and constituted the First Battalion. The three companies and detachment of Minnesota troops were lettered respectively E, F, G and H, and constituted the Second Battalion. The Osage Mounted Rifles, and Captains Brackett, West and Naughton's companies, were lettered respectively I, K, L and M, and constituted the Third Battalion. The subjoined roster shows the original field and staff and company organization, and the subsequent changes which occurred on account of death, promotion, resignation, discharge, or from whatever cause. It also gives the personal record of each officer and enlisted man in so far as such record could be obtained from the archives of the office of the Adjutant General of the State of Iowa, and of the War Department at Washington. Great effort has been made to make this revised roster of the regiment as nearly correct as possible, but there may be some names that are not correctly spelled and some records that are not complete, also some that are not entirely correct. The compiler believes that such errors and omissions have been reduced to the minimum, and that, in the main, the roster will be found correct. The regiment was composed of companies and detachments from the States of Iowa, Minnesota, Missouri and the then Territory of Nebraska. In the official history of the organization and service of the regiment, by First Lieutenant William T. Hays, a brief history of each company is given, prior to the date upon which it joined the regiment. The compiler, in preparing this condensed historical sketch, has endeavored to include, so far as the limitation of space to which he is subjected would permit, the leading features embraced in the history referred to.²

Company A was recruited at Omaha, Neb., by M. T. Patrick, and at Sidney, Iowa, by William Kelsay, some thirty men from the latter place. It was mustered into the service of the United States at Omaha, Sept. 14, 1861. Company B was recruited at Omaha, Neb., by J. T. Croft, and in Mills County, Iowa, by Milton S. Summers. About thirty of its men were from Iowa. It was mustered into the service at Omaha, Sept. 21, 1861. Company C was recruited at Nebraska City, Neb. Ter., and in Page County, Iowa, by Captain J. M. Young and Alfred Matthias, and was mustered into the service at Omaha, Oct. 3, 1861. Company D was composed of men recruited in Omaha, Neb., by William Curl, and thirty-five men from Missouri, recruited by William Aston, and was mustered into the service at St. Louis, Nov. 13, 1861. Company E was enlisted at Dubuque, Iowa, by Captain Carl Schäffer de Boernstein, for the Fremont Hussars, and went into quarters at Camp Asboth, near St. Louis. It was mustered into the service October 25, 1861, and subsequently assigned to the "Curtis Horse" Regiment. Company F was enlisted at Fort Madison and Burlington, Iowa, by Lieutenant William A. Haw, for the Fremont Hussars, and was mustered into the service at St. Louis, Oct. 28, 1861, and subsequently assigned to the "Curtis Horse" Regiment. Company G was enlisted at St. Paul and Fort Snelling, Minn., by Captain Von Minden, was mustered into the service at Fort Snelling, Minn., Oct. 9, 1861, and subsequently assigned to the "Curtis Horse" Regiment. Company H was composed of a detachment of twenty-seven men, enlisted at Bellevue, Iowa, by Lieutenant L. Millar, for the Fremont Hussars, was subsequently recruited to the number of fifty-five men, and, with William T. Hays as First Lieutenant, was mustered into the service Jan. 9, 1862, as a half company. The company organization was completed at Fort Henry, Tenn., Feb. 11, 1862, and it was assigned to the "Curtis Horse" Regiment. Company I was enlisted in Blue Earth and Scott Counties, Minn., by Captain D. M. West, and was mustered into the service at Fort Snelling, Minn., Nov. 1, 1861, and assigned to the "Curtis Horse" Regiment. Company K was enlisted at St. Paul and Minneapolis, Minn., by Capt. A. B. Brackett, and was mustered into the service at Fort Snelling, Minn., Oct. 28, 1861, and assigned to the "Curtis Horse" Regiment. Company L was enlisted at St. Louis, Mo., by Captain P. Naughton, and mustered into the service at Jefferson City, Mo., Sept. 1, 1861. The company was then known as the "Irish Dragoons," of the Irish Brigade, commanded by Colonel Mulligan. This company was part of the command of Major Zagonyl at the time of his memorable charge into Springfield, Mo., and, for their gallantry on that occasion, were presented by the ladies of Springfield with a beautiful silk flag, with "Springfield" emblazoned on it. Their Captain was severely wounded in the charge, their First Lieutenant killed, and one corporal and four privates wounded. The company was subsequently assigned to the "Curtis Horse" Regiment. Company M was enlisted in Osage County, Mo., by Captain J. K. Kidd, and was mustered into the service at Jefferson Barracks, Mo., Sept. 14, 1861, as the "Osage Independent Mounted Rifles." It joined the "Curtis Horse" Regiment at Benton Barracks, Jan. 4, 1862.

Under the energetic leadership of Colonel Lowe, who was a trained soldier of the Regular Army, the regiment became quite efficient in drill and discipline before the close of January, 1862. The Government was not at that time able to procure the best quality of arms for the new regiments, and the "Curtis Horse" was compelled to take the field with one-half the men armed with the Hall carbine and the old pattern of heavy cavalry saber, and the other half with the Remington revolver and heavy saber. With this poor armament, but otherwise fairly well equipped, the regiment left Benton Barracks on Feb. 8, 1862, marched to St. Louis, and there embarked on transports and was conveyed to Fort Henry, Tenn., where it arrived and went into camp near the fort on February 11th. On February 14th, the First Battalion, under command of Major Kelsay, reported to Colonel Morgan L. Smith, and went into camp at Fort Heiman, Ky. On February 15th, pursuant to orders from General Grant, Lieutenant Colonel Patrick, and Captains West, Von Minden and Haw, with one hundred men, marched up the Tennessee River and destroyed the bridge of the Memphis and Ohio Railroad, thus preventing the rebel reinforcements reaching Fort Donelson. The detachment returned to camp on the morning of the 16th, having marched seventy-five miles in twenty-four hours. After the fall of Fort Donelson, the regiment was actively engaged in scouting, and captured some prisoners and horses, but did not encounter any considerable body of the enemy during this period of its operations. Major William Kelsay, the commander of the First Battalion, died of typhoid fever on February 28, 1862, and was buried with military honors at Fort Heiman, Ky. He was a brave and efficient officer, and his death was deplored by the regiment, and especially by the First Battalion, with which he was most closely identified.

On the 11th of March, 1862, Captain J. T. Croft, commanding the First Battalion, in pursuance of orders from General Grant, marched with two hundred fifty men twelve miles in the direction of Paris, Tenn., and there awaited the arrival of Colonel Patrick, with the Second and Third Battalions of the regiment, and the battery commanded by Captain Bullis. The movement was for the purpose of dispersing a rebel force, known to be in the vicinity of Paris and engaged in securing conscripts for the rebel army. At 11 o'clock A. M. Captain Bullis arrived with his battery, and Captain Croft moved forward without waiting for the arrival of the other two battalions. Within two miles of Paris, six of the rebel pickets were surprised and captured. The First Battalion and battery arrived at Paris at 5 o'clock P. M. and entered the town, driving the rebel pickets back to the position of the enemy, who, to the number of five hundred, were found posted on a ridge, half a mile west of the town. Two guns were placed in position on a hill within range of the enemy's position, and opened a vigorous fire. After a few rounds had been fired, Captain Lower, with Companies A and B, made a charge upon the enemy's line, but encountered fallen timber, behind which the enemy was posted, and was compelled to fall back under a severe fire and rejoin the main force. The guns were then all placed in position, and, after a heavy and rapid fire had for some time been directed against the enemy's position, his line was seen to waver and give way. The whole time occupied in the engagement was thirty-five minutes.

As it was learned that reinforcements were marching to the aid of the rebel force, Captain Croft decided to retreat until he could rejoin the other two battalions of the regiment. The next day he met Lieutenant Colonel Patrick, who had crossed the river the day before with the Second and Third Battalions, about three miles from Fort Heiman. The battle of Paris was the first experience of any portion of the regiment under the fire of the enemy. The casualties were: four killed, five wounded, and one captured. Total ten.³ Among the killed was Sergeant Major Martin Stowell, of the First Battalion. Captain Bullis, who commanded the battery, was mortally wounded and died the next day after the battle. A few days later the First Battalion moved to the camp of the other two battalions, and the regiment was again united.

On March 27, 1862, in compliance with an order from General Grant, Companies C, I and M, under command of Major Brackett, were conveyed by steamer to Savannah, Tenn., and were employed with the Army of the Tennessee during the succeeding five months. This detachment arrived at Savannah on March 29th, and went into camp. It rendered important service to the Telegraph Corps, putting up the line from Savannah to Waynesboro, a distance of twenty-five miles, where it met the advance of General Buell's army, and was subsequently employed as escort to the Telegraph Corps during the advance of General Grant's army from Pittsburg Landing to Corinth and during the siege of the latter place. After the evacuation of Corinth, the detachment was sent on a scouting expedition to the west of that place. At Cypress Creek it found the railroad bridge burned and nine locomotives partially destroyed, also the ruins of a commissary train. A six-pound brass cannon had also been abandoned by the enemy at that place. Major Brackett's detachment scoured the country in the vicinity of the destroyed bridge, and captured one hundred and twelve prisoners. With two of the locomotives which were the least injured, and which were put in running order, and with the brass cannon, and the prisoners, the detachment returned to Corinth on June 2d. On June 5th, a detail of twenty-five men of the detachment went to Purdy with a locomotive, captured seven cars found at that place and returned with them to Corinth the same day. On the 12th of June the detachment marched toward Humboldt, where it arrived on June 15th, and went into camp. While at Humboldt, Major Brackett acted as Post Commander, and Captain Young as Provost Marshal. These officers rendered valuable assistance to Colonel Hawkins, in raising his regiment (the "Second West Tennessee Cavalry"), which was composed of loyal citizens of that portion of the State, and which afterwards rendered valuable service in the Union army. The detachment also rendered important service in the capture of many rebel soldiers, large quantities of sugar, tobacco and other property, which was turned over to the commissary department, as contraband of war. General Mitchell having arrived at Humboldt with his division, the detachment was relieved from duty there and rejoined the regiment at Fort Heiman on the 29th of August, 1862.

On the 9th of April, 1862, a detachment, consisting of twenty-five men each from Companies E, F, G and H, under command of Major Schaffer de Boernstein, marched to Henry Station, where a large amount of supplies had been accumulated and were ready for shipment to the rebel army at Memphis. The Major confiscated as much of the flour and hams as he could convey to the camp of his regiment and then set fire to the depot, thus destroying the remainder of the rebel stores. He succeeded in rejoining the regiment without coming in contact with the enemy, although a considerable force had been reported in the vicinity of the station, and the Major had anticipated a fight.

³The names of all the killed, wounded and captured, in this and every other engagement or skirmish in which the regiment participated, will be found in the subjoined roster. Also the names of those who died from wounds or disease.

But this gallant and intrepid officer was not so fortunate in his next expedition. On May 3d, in accordance with orders from Colonel Lowe, a detachment under command of Major Schaffer de Boernstein, consisting of Companies E, Captain Nott, F, Captain Haw, and G, Captain Von Minden, left Camp Lowe to reconnoiter beyond Paris and the neighborhood of the Obion River. On May 6th, at 5 o'clock P. M., the detachment went into camp near Lockridge's Mill, Company F camping half a mile from the other two companies on the road towards Dresden. Pickets had been thrown out, and the usual precautions to guard against a surprise had been taken. Supper was being prepared, when the pickets were fired upon and driven back to the reserve, which, in turn, was driven to the camps, the rebel force making the attack upon both camps at the same time. The men formed in line of battle and made a gallant resistance, but were soon overpowered by the greatly superior force of the enemy. Finding themselves so completely outnumbered that further resistance was useless—after twenty-four of their number had been killed and wounded and thirty-eight had cut their way out and escaped—the remainder of the detachment, hemmed in on every side, surrendered themselves as prisoners of war. Major Carl Schaffer de Boernstein was mortally wounded and died near the scene of the action on the next day.⁴ Captain William A. Haw, while bravely endeavoring to cut his way through the ranks of the enemy, fell at the head of his company, severely wounded in the head, back and side, and was taken prisoner. Captain Nott, although severely wounded, escaped with eleven of his men, and, after suffering almost incredible hardships, reached the Union lines at Paducah, Ky. Captain Von Minden was also wounded, and captured, with fourteen men of his company. The force of the enemy numbered over 2,000, under command of the rebel Colonel Clayborne. With such a great disparity in numbers, it is simply marvelous that any of the Union soldiers could have escaped being killed, wounded or captured. The prisoners were all sent to Jackson, Miss., and, with the exception of the officers, were shortly afterwards paroled, and rejoined the regiment on June 7th. They were subsequently exchanged. The officers captured—Captains Haw and Von Minden and Lieutenant Von Vredenburg—were held in captivity until October 15th, when they were paroled, and were exchanged in December. They had not sufficiently recovered from their wounds and the hardships to which they had been subjected in prison to be able to rejoin the regiment until in January, 1863.

Upon learning of the disaster that had occurred to the detachment, Colonel Lowe started in pursuit of the enemy, with the remaining force of his own regiment, four companies of the Fifty-second Indiana Infantry, the Fourth Minnesota Infantry and a section of artillery. When within four miles of Paris, however, a peremptory order was received from General Halleck to abandon the pursuit, as the rebel force under Colonel Clayborne had retreated to Jackson, Tenn., and the force under Colonel Lowe was not large enough to risk an advance so far into the interior of the State. The troops under Colonel Lowe then returned to camp.

⁴Carl Boernstein Schaffer, of Dubuque, Iowa, was Third Sergeant of Company H, First Iowa Infantry. (Bernstein Charles Schaffer.) At the expiration of his three months' service in that regiment, which included participation in the battle of Springfield, he was given a commission with the rank of Captain, by General Fremont, and authorized to raise a troop of cavalry in Iowa, which subsequently became a part of the Fifth Iowa Cavalry. Schaffer was a German and a nobleman by birth. Succeeding to his parental titles and estate of the Barony of Boernsteln, after his enlistment in the First Iowa, he assumed the surname of Boernstein, to which his estate and rank entitled him. But, instead of returning to his native land, and assuming his place among the nobility, he sacrificed his life upon the altar of his adopted country. He was a true patriot, thoroughly devoted to the cause of liberty and republican institutions.

Since the 13th of March, Companies K and L had been on detached service guarding the telegraph line from Fort Henry to Smithland, Ky. These companies returned to the regiment on the 8th of June. The duties performed by the regiment, at this period of its service, were to assist the civil authorities in the administration of the laws, to prevent recruiting for the rebel army, and in scouting in the surrounding country. The disloyal element of the population predominated and was constantly endeavoring to give aid and comfort to the rebel cause. The officers of the regiment had a difficult task to perform. It required the exercise of good judgment and patience to protect the loyal citizens against their disloyal neighbors and to conform to the military orders which were issued from General Halleck's headquarters.

On the 25th of June, 1862, the regiment, which up to that date had been known as the "Curtis Horse," was assigned to the State of Iowa and given the designation of the "Fifth Iowa Cavalry," and this was its official name for the remainder of its term of service. On that date the regiment had an aggregate strength of 857, officers and enlisted men. During the greater portion of the remainder of the summer of 1862, the duties performed by the regiment were of the same nature as those heretofore described. No considerable force of the enemy appeared in the vicinity of Fort Heiman, where the regiment was encamped. Lieutenants William T. Hays and Robert W. Peckham were detailed as recruiting officers, and sent to Iowa July 21st. On the 26th of August, the rebel Colonel Woodward, with 600 men, made an attack upon Fort Donelson, but was repulsed by the garrison of three companies of the Seventy-first Ohio, under command of Major Hart. Upon the approach of the rebel force the Major telegraphed to Colonel Lowe for reinforcements. The Colonel promptly moved with six companies of his regiment, and arrived at Fort Donelson at 9 P. M., at which time the enemy had been repulsed and had fallen back up the river. On the morning of the 27th, at daylight, Colonel Lowe started in pursuit. After marching about six miles, the enemy's pickets were discovered near the mines of the Cumberland Iron Works. Companies B and D were deployed as skirmishers, and were soon engaged with the enemy. A deep and muddy creek stopped the advance of Company D, but Company B, under command of the gallant and intrepid Lieutenant Milton S. Summers, found a bridge, over which he crossed, under the fire of the enemy, and pushed forward. The enemy then opened fire with their one piece of artillery. Lieutenant Summers immediately gave the order to charge, and, although the gun was supported by three companies of infantry, well protected on the right by the steep bank of the river, and on the left by a strong fence and heavy timber, it was captured, and the infantry supporting it broke and fled. Flushed with this success Lieutenant Summers and his men dashed forward and came headlong upon the main body of the enemy, 400 strong, posted in the cellars of the burned houses, and among the ruins of the Iron Works. Colonel Lowe had advanced with the remainder of his force and engaged the enemy, but, having only 130 men, he found it impossible to dislodge him, and did not succeed in removing the gun which had been captured on account of the horses attached to it having been killed or disabled. The caisson and ammunition were destroyed and the gun was dismounted and abandoned. Colonel Lowe then retreated to Fort Donelson. The regiment lost in this engagement five killed and nine wounded. First Lieutenant Milton S. Summers led the charge, and, getting in advance of his men, was surrounded by the enemy. He fought gallantly, killing one of his assailants, and wounding another severely with his saber. After he had been wounded in the thigh by a bayonet and had received seven balls in his body, he drew his revolver and emptied it among his foes. He refused to surrender, and was only taken prisoner after he was mortally wounded. He died the next day. Lieutenant Hays says of him: "A more gallant officer never drew sword for his country." Second Lieutenant E. G. McNeely was also severely wounded and captured. On the 5th of September, Colonel Lowe again left Fort Donelson with the Fifth Iowa Cavalry, Thirteenth Wisconsin Infantry, Eleventh Illinois Infantry, and a battery of artillery, in pursuit of the rebel forces under Colonel Woodward. The command crossed the Cumberland River and made a vigorous march for three days, but the enemy rapidly retreated and would not risk a general engagement. Beyond the capture of a considerable amount of rebel stores at the town of Clarksville, no important results were gained by the expedition.

During the month of October the forces of the enemy, under Colonels Woodward and Napier, made several demonstrations against Forts Henry and Heiman, but no attack was made. The Fifth Iowa Cavalry was constantly called upon for scouting duty, to watch the movements of the enemy and prevent a surprise. On the 1st of November the regiment, under command of Lieutenant Colonel Patrick, joined the command of General Ransom, consisting of the Eleventh Illinois Infantry, a detachment of the Thirteenth Wisconsin Infantry, a detachment of the Eighty-third Illinois Infantry, one company of the Sixth Illinois Cavalry and one section of Floyd's Battery. With this force, General Ransom marched against the enemy, who had been threatening to attack the forts. The pursuit was pushed vigorously, the Fifth Iowa and the company of the Sixth Illinois Cavalry taking the advance. On the 6th of November Lieutenant Colonel Patrick's command captured a portion of the enemy's supply train. November 7th, the enemy was found in line of battle at Garrettsburg, Ky. After a brief skirmish, the enemy retreated two miles, with the cavalry and artillery in pursuit, closely followed by the infantry. The enemy again took position and was vigorously attacked by General Ransom's troops, and, after a brief engagement, was driven from the field with a loss of seventeen killed, eighty-five wounded and sixty prisoners. Lieutenant Gallagher and Private Roach of Company L, Fifth Iowa Cavalry, were among the killed in this engagement. It was the first time in which the regiment had gone into action with a force properly proportioned to that of the enemy, and the result clearly showed that, where the contending forces were nearly evenly matched, the Union troops were able to vanquish their rebel foes. In his official report, General Ransom highly complimented the Fifth Iowa Cavalry for its conduct on the march and in the engagement. The regiment returned to Fort Heiman November 11th. During the remainder of the month, and in December, the regiment was employed in building winter quarters at Fort Heiman and in scouting through the surrounding country.

The month of January, 1863, was not marked by any event of special importance. The regiment was actively engaged in scouting, but there is no record of any encounter with the enemy during the month. On the 2d of February, Captain Von Minden, of Company G, with twenty-eight of his men, while engaged in scouting near the Cumberland Iron Works, met the advance of the rebel General Forrest's command, then marching to attack Fort Donelson. The captain and his men fell into an ambush, which had been skillfully planned by the enemy, and the little detachment, being completely surrounded by a greatly superior force, had no alternative but to surrender. The rest of the regiment promptly marched from Fort Heiman to reinforce the garrison at Fort Donelson but, upon its arrival, found that the rebel force had failed in their attack upon the fort and had retreated. On February 6th, the regiment returned to its headquarters at Fort Heiman, where it remained until March 5, 1863, upon which date orders were received to evacuate Fort Heiman, and the regiment moved to Fort Donelson, where it was stationed until the 5th of June, 1863, in the performance of duties much the same as those in which it had previously been engaged. The record shows but two occasions in which portions of the regiment came into conflict with the enemy during this period of its service. The first of these was upon the 10th of April, when Company H, which had been upon a scout, in which it had discovered a considerable force of the enemy, near Waverly, was returning towards Fort Donelson, closely pursued by a party of rebels. Upon nearing the fort the rebels abandoned the pursuit, and were returning towards Waverly, when they were met and attacked by Company M, of the Fifth Iowa Cavalry, which had also been on a scout. In the fight which ensued the rebels were quickly defeated, with a loss of three killed and twenty-one captured, including their commander, Major Blanton, and Surgeon Smith, while the loss of Company M was one man wounded. In this fight the rebels were evidently surprised and taken at a disadvantage, and the situation, which had several times existed in previous conflicts, was reversed. On the 19th of May, Lieutenant Colonel Patrick, commanding seven companies of the Fifth Iowa Cavalry and other troops from the garrison at Fort Donelson, went upon an expedition lasting five days, during which a large quantity of bacon and other supplies belonging to the enemy were captured. Upon the return march Company A, of the Fifth Iowa, had a skirmish with the enemy, in which Captain Paul had his horse killed under him and himself received a slight wound. Lieutenant Beatty, of Company M, was also slightly wounded. The rebels were pursued for some distance, but made their escape.

On the 5th of June, 1863, the regiment left Fort Donelson and entered upon a larger field of operations. It marched to Nashville, and thence to Murfreesboro, where it was assigned to the First Brigade of the Second Division of the Cavalry Corps, Army of the Cumberland. General Rosecrans had then commenced his grand movement against the rebel General Bragg's army. For the next three months the Fifth Iowa Cavalry was engaged in heavy scouting duty about Lebanon and Murfreesboro. On the 25th of June the regiment was scouting in the direction of Guy's Gap, upon a stony and difficult road through a dense thicket of Cedars, when it encountered a force of the enemy, which it drove before it for over a mile, and developed the position of the main force of the enemy, which was the purpose of the reconnaissance upon which it had been sent. In this encounter the loss to the enemy (as subsequently reported) was thirty killed and wounded, while that of the Fifth Iowa was but two men wounded. The regiment was highly complimented by the General commanding for its prompt and effective action in this affair. On the 26th of July the regiment moved to Lebanon and Silver Springs, and from that date until the close of the month had captured forty prisoners. On July 31st it returned to Murfreesboro, and during the month of August was engaged in guarding trains from that place to the front. On September 6th the regiment, except Companies I and K, left Murfreesboro for McMinnville, Tenn., where it arrived September 8th, and remained until the 26th, during which time detachments were sent to Sparta, Woodbury and Tracy City, upon scouting expeditions. In one of these, Lieutenant D. H. Stevens, of Company B, was wounded.

From September 26th to the close of the month the regiment was again on the march and, on September 30th, was in camp near Winchester, from which place it again took up the line of march to watch the movements of the rebel force under the command of General Wheeler, which had crossed the mountains for the purpose of destroying bridges and otherwise rendering the Nashville and Chattanooga Railroad useless for the transportation of troops and supplies for the Union army. The regiment moved from Winchester to different points along the line of the railroad and, on October 6th, had a skirmish with the enemy, in which it had one man—Henry Perkins of Company K—mortally wounded. On October 9th, in another skirmish with the enemy, E. W. Sloan, of Company H, was wounded. The pursuit was kept up to the Tennessee River, but the rebel General Wheeler, by marching his cavalry day and night, succeeded in getting across the river and making his escape, after losing about one hundred and fifty of his men, killed, wounded and captured. In this pursuit, the entire Second Cavalry Division, under command of General Crook, was engaged. Colonel Lowe of the Fifth Iowa was in command of the First Brigade, and Lieutenant Colonel Patrick commanded the regiment. From the Tennessee River the Second Cavalry Division turned in pursuit of the rebel General Roddy's cavalry, then in camp at Athens, Tenn. Lieutenant Colonel Patrick, with the Fifth Iowa and a detachment of the Fourth Michigan Cavalry, marched all night on October 17th, reaching Athens at sunrise, to find the rebel force had withdrawn across the river. Lieutenant Colonel Patrick then returned with his command to Maysville, having marched seventy miles in twenty-four hours. While no general engagement had been fought, the designs of the rebel General had been frustrated and the Union line of transportation protected and kept open for the passage of troops, supplies and munitions of war. From October 17th to November 14th, the regiment remained in camp at Maysville, giving the men and horses a much needed rest before again resuming active operations against the enemy.

On the 14th of November, Major Young, of the Fifth Iowa Cavalry, commanding a select force of 400 men from the Fourth United States Cavalry, Seventeenth and Seventy-second Indiana Mounted Infantry, and Fifth Iowa Cavalry, under orders from Colonel Lowe, then in temporary command of the Second Cavalry Division, moved from Maysville to prevent a flank movement of the enemy across the Tennessee River. Major Young marched with his command across the mountains in rear of Huntsville, by way of Blevins' Gap, to avoid the spies of the enemy. On the march a drove of hogs—which was being driven towards the enemy's camp—was captured, and, on arriving at the Tennessee River, the ferry boat was captured, and many valuable horses, which had been secreted by the enemy on the adjacent islands, were also captured. Destroying the ferry boat, the command marched to Triana, where the enemy had taken the precaution to keep all the boats on the opposite side of the river, to be sent over only when preconcerted signals were given, to indicate that Union troops were not in the vicinity of the landing. As the destruction of these boats was one of the main objects of the expedition, volunteers were called for to cross and secure them. Sergeant Phelps—of Company G—and eleven men from the Fifth Iowa Cavalry were selected from those who volunteered, and, by means of row boats and canoes, and under cover of sharpshooters, they crossed the river and captured two large ferry boats without losing a man. With these boats a party of thirty men started down the river, while Major Young's command marched down along the river bank to co-operate with them. Eight large boats were captured during the night and, at day-break, the object of the expedition was accomplished, the boats were destroyed, and the command started on the return march to camp, where it arrived November 17th. The result of this expedition—in which the Fifth Iowa Cavalry bore such a conspicuous part—was the capture of a rebel Captain and eight of his men, nine large ferry boats captured and destroyed, two hundred fine mules and horses captured, one mill—used by the enemy—destroyed, and negroes brought in to complete the organization of a regiment, then in camp at Maysville. Of this expedition General Elliott, Chief of Cavalry, said: "The success of the scout under command of Major J. M. Young, Fifth Iowa Cavalry, shows that he has been energetic, and shows good judgment in the management of his command." The report of Major Young also received acknowledgment as follows:

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF THE CUMBERLAND,
Chattanooga, Tenn., November 30, 1863.

BRIGADIER GENERAL GEORGE CROOK, Commanding
Second Cavalry Division, Maysville, Ala.

GENERAL: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of the report of Major J. M. Young, Fifth Iowa Cavalry, of his expedition through the country situated between the Memphis and Charleston Railroad and the Tennessee River, between the 14th and 17th inst. The Major General commanding directs that you tender his thanks to Major Young for the brave, energetic and prudent manner in which the expedition was conducted.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM D. WHIPPLE,
Brigadier General and A. A. G.⁵

On November 25th, the regiment, with its brigade and division, marched to Huntsville, Ala., and went into camp. On November 27th, the Fifth Iowa, and seven companies of the Fourth United States Cavalry, with Lieutenant Colonel Patrick in command, started upon an expedition, lasting eleven days, which accomplished important results in the capture of hogs, cattle, a ferry boat and other property intended for the use of the rebel army. There was some skirmishing with the pickets of the enemy at Gunter'sville on November 29th, in which no casualties occurred, and during the remainder of the expedition, which covered a considerable extent of territory, there is no record of any encounter with the enemy. Upon the return march, Companies F, G, H and I, of the Fifth Iowa, were left at Dodsonville, under the command of Major Brackett, where they remained and performed the duty of patrolling the country along the Tennessee River for a distance of forty miles, until relieved on the 21st of December, when they marched to Huntsville and rejoined the regiment. While the detachment was on duty at Dodsonville—on the 19th of December—Major Brackett sent Sergeants McGuire and Ireland, and Private Ireland of Company H, to Paint Rock with dispatches. When within four miles of their destination the party was captured by a band of twenty-one rebel soldiers, and their arms, money and other property, together with most of their clothing, taken from them. Private Ireland, who had charge of the dispatches, managed to secrete them, so they were not discovered, but, fearing their subsequent discovery and the penalty of being executed as spies, the three prisoners kept a constant lookout for an opportunity to escape. That night the rebels camped upon the mountain side near its summit, carefully guarding their prisoners. The next morning, leaving two of their number on guard, with orders to shoot the prisoners should they attempt to escape, the rest of the band went down the mountain to watch the road over which the Union troops might be expected to pass. The prisoners awaited their opportunity, and, at the first moment their guards slightly relaxed their vigilance, sprang upon and succeeded in partially disarming them. In the struggle which ensued both the guards were killed and the prisoners escaped. The bodies of the two rebel soldiers were found where they fell, the next day, their companions having fled and left them unburied. Major Brackett reported the affair, congratulating the men upon their good fortune in escaping, and thanking Private George Ireland for his preservation of the official dispatches.

On December 24th the regiment, with its brigade and division, left Huntsville and marched to Pulaski, which place was reached on December 28th, and the troops went into camp there. On January 1, 1864, (more than three-fourths of the Fifth Iowa Cavalry having re-enlisted as veteran volunteers,) preparations were made to leave the field, by turning over horses, arms and equipments, and, on January 7th, the regiment started for Nashville, the first part of the journey being made on foot and the latter part by rail. The regiment arrived at Nashville on January 10th, and went into barracks. It remained there until January 29th—having been re-mustered and paid in the meantime—and, on the date last mentioned, embarked on steamer and was conveyed to Cairo, Ill., arriving there January 31st. On February 1st, Companies L and M were furloughed at Cairo and embarked on steamer for St. Louis. On the same date, Companies G, I and K received their furloughs and left by rail for Minnesota. On the same date, Lieutenant Colonel Patrick, with the remaining companies of the regiment, left Cairo on a special train for Davenport, Iowa, where they received furloughs on February 3d, with orders to report at Davenport on March 5th. On the 25th of February, 1864, Companies G, I and K were re-assigned to the State of Minnesota, by Special Order No. 91, of the Secretary of War, and organized as an independent battalion, with Major Brackett in command. The subsequent history of this battalion is, therefore, disconnected with that of the Fifth Iowa Cavalry.

The remaining companies of the regiment reported at the rendezvous at Davenport, March 5, 1864, and went into quarters at Camp McClellan, and there awaited further orders. On March 17th, Lieutenants Hays and Langdon were detailed on recruiting service, under orders from the War Department, to raise three new companies for the regiment to replace Companies G, I and K, transferred to the State of Minnesota. On March 22d the nine companies then composing the regiment left Davenport by rail and arrived at Nashville, Tenn., March 31st and went into camp near that city.

During the month of April, 1864, the regiment lay in camp near Nashville, doing picket duty dismounted, as horses could not be procured. On May 5th, all the portion of the regiment for which arms had been procured left Nashville, under command of Major Beard, and proceeded to Pulaski, where it was assigned to the duty of guarding the Nashville and Decatur Railroad. About this time Colonel Lowe was assigned to the command of the Third Cavalry Division, and Major Young and Lieutenants Hinds and Watson were detailed as members of his staff. Lieutenant Colonel Patrick remained with the unarmed portion of the regiment at Nashville, awaiting a supply of arms and horses. During the month of June, 1864, Lieutenant Colonel Patrick obtained some 360 horses, a few carbines, and horse equipments sufficient for the whole regiment. On July 9th all the companies of the regiment were reunited at Decatur, Ala., and on the next day—horses and a sufficiency of arms having been procured—the regiment became a part of the cavalry division commanded by General Rousseau, which had just been organized and was ready to start upon an expedition through a region of country which had not before been penetrated by Union troops. The command consisted of the Eighth Indiana, Second Kentucky and Ninth Ohio Cavalry, composing the First Brigade, under command of Colonel Harrison of the Eighth Indiana; and the Fifth Iowa, Fourth Tennessee Cavalry and a section of artillery, composing the Second Brigade, under command of Lieutenant Colonel Patrick of the Fifth Iowa, with Major Beard commanding the regiment. Major General L. H. Rousseau, an able officer and a good disciplinarian, was in command of the division. The whole command numbered somewhat less than 3,000 men. The men were well armed, lightly equipped and provided with rations of bread, bacon, coffee and sugar to last five days, or longer, if necessary, with what could be procured in the country through which they were to march. No wagons accompanied the expedition. There were three pack mules to each company, to convey rations, ammunition, etc., and but one ambulance to each regiment. This command, after rapid marching, the command of General Rousseau moved out of Decatur on July 19, 1864. Limitation of space will not permit a detailed description of this, or the other notable expeditions in which the Fifth Iowa Cavalry participated in the closing campaigns of the war. In summing up the results of the expedition under General Rousseau, Lieutenant Hays says:

July 22d at daybreak the march was resumed, and at noon the command reached our pickets at Sweet Water Bridge, and arrived at Marietta at sunset and went into camp, the men and horses nearly worn out with the almost continuous march of thirteen days and nights, during which time the command marched 380 miles, entirely in the enemy's territory, destroyed 35 miles of railroad, five large depots filled with cotton and supplies for the rebel army, one shot and shell manufactory, one locomotive and train of cars, and captured many valuable horses and mules, inflicting a loss on the enemy estimated at twenty millions of dollars. All this was accomplished with a loss to us of one Captain and four privates killed and eight privates wounded. All the above loss was in the Fifth Iowa Cavalry, except one man of the Eighth Indiana Cavalry, wounded; which shows the prominent part the Fifth Iowa Cavalry bore in what may well be termed the most successful raid of the war.⁶

Among the killed was Captain William Curl, of Company D, and among the severely wounded was Captain J. C. Wilcox, of Company H. The entire loss of the two brigades, in killed, wounded and missing, did not exceed thirty men. It will thus be seen that the Fifth Iowa Cavalry sustained nearly one-half the casualties of the entire command, and took the most conspicuous part of any regiment engaged in the expedition.

The next expedition in which the regiment participated began with the accomplishment of most brilliant results, and ended most disastrously. On July 23d, the Fifth Iowa Cavalry, with the other troops composing the command of Colonel Harrison, marched to the relief of General Stoneman, whose force had been picketing the Chattahoochee River from Sweet Water to Nick-a-Jack Creek. The command marched all night, arriving at the river at noon the next day. The enemy was posted on the opposite side of the river. The Fifth Iowa Cavalry was ordered to report to General McCook. The regiment marched up the river six miles, crossed on a pontoon bridge, and reported at General McCook's headquarters, when it was ordered to proceed to Vining's Station and draw three days' rations, and then rejoin the command. The rations were drawn, the regiment joined the command of General McCook and, at noon of July 26th, started with that command on the memorable raid to the rear of Atlanta. The object of the raid was the destruction of the enemy's communications on the Atlanta and Macon Railroad, the objective point being Lovejoy's Station. All the afternoon and the following night the march was continued down the Chattahoochee River, and, at sunrise on July 28th, the command had reached a point opposite Campbellton, where a force of the enemy was posted. The troops marched on down the river to a point five miles below Campbellton, where a pontoon bridge was laid across the river, upon which the troops crossed and pushed rapidly forward, reaching Palmetto Station, on the Atlanta and West Point Railroad, about dark. Here about 600 of the enemy were stationed, who, after a slight skirmish, were driven off, and the depot fired, the telegraph wire torn down, and the railroad track torn up for a short distance. After completing the work of destruction the troops moved on, the Fifth Iowa Cavalry acting as rear guard, and the march continuing until a train of 500 wagons, containing the extra baggage of the rebel army at Atlanta, was overtaken and captured, together with the 250 officers and men who were guarding it, and 2,000 fine mules and horses. The wagons, which were loaded with various kinds of army property, were burned with their contents. After destroying the train the command marched to Fayetteville, where it arrived at daylight on the morning of July 29th. Halting only long enough to feed and rest the horses, the troops pushed forward to Lovejoy's Station, the objective point of the expedition, and, upon arriving there, destroyed a portion of the track of the Atlanta and Macon Railroad, and burned the depot.

The results of the expedition had thus far been eminently successful and the damage inflicted upon the enemy very great. The commanding General of the rebel cavalry now concentrated his forces rapidly for the purpose of intercepting and cutting off the retreat of the Union troops engaged in this daring raid, and the return march was replete with disaster to General McCook's command. After leaving Lovejoy's Station the troops marched rapidly, with the Fifth Iowa Cavalry in advance and the Eighth Iowa Cavalry as rear guard. The troops had marched but a few miles, however, when the rear guard was fiercely attacked, and the Eighth Iowa lost two officers and seven men killed, and fourteen men wounded in the fight which ensued. Part of the command turned back to assist the Eighth Iowa, and the enemy was repulsed. In the meantime, the Fifth Iowa, marching rapidly in advance, came to the bridge over Flint River, and found the enemy in the act of firing it. After a brisk encounter the enemy was driven off, and the regiment crossed the bridge, accompanied by the artillery—two Parrott guns, which were quickly placed in position to cover the bridge, the Fifth Iowa taking position in support of the guns. In a short time the rest of General McCook's command arrived, closely pursued by the enemy, but succeeded in crossing the bridge, which was then destroyed. The Fifth Iowa Cavalry again took the advance on the road leading to Fayetteville, but, after marching for two miles, was ordered back to the main command, which had not moved. Again the regiment was ordered to advance on the same road, and again ordered to return after going about the same distance. Three precious hours were lost by this vacillation and delay. Finally, at dark, General McCook sent four companies of the Fifth Iowa to the rear, with orders to remain and report the movements of the enemy. The balance of the regiment was placed in front, with Company H, commanded by Lieutenant Hays, in the advance, with orders to charge, if he encountered the enemy, and keep the road clear for the advance of the rest of the command. Soon after the march was resumed, the advance encountered a force of the enemy. A charge was promptly made and the rebels were repulsed and driven away, without scarcely interrupting the march of the main column. The march was continued during the night, but slow progress was made on account of the difficulty of keeping the prisoners and the large number of captured horses and mules well under guard. At 10 A. M., July 30th, the advance reached the town of Newnan, where a force of 1,000 rebels had taken position. Major Beard, with five companies of the Fifth Iowa and two companies of the Eighth Indiana, charged into the town, but was unable to dislodge the enemy. General McCook then ordered the Fifth Iowa and Eighth Indiana to remain in line of battle and hold the enemy in check, while he moved with the rest of the command, and the prisoners, around the town to the left. The movement occupied two hours, and compelled the command to march at least five miles out of a direct course, thereby enabling the enemy to concentrate a large force to resist the further advance of the column. About four miles from Newnan this force was encountered. The two Parrott guns were placed in position and shelled the enemy vigorously. The enemy made three separate charges upon the guns, fighting desperately for their possession, but each charge was repulsed, and the guns continued their fire until the ammunition was exhausted. The guns were then spiked, the wheels cut down and, thus rendered useless, they were abandoned. General McCook found his command completely surrounded by a greatly superior force under the command of the rebel General Wheeler. The situation was most desperate. Orders were given to each regiment to charge and cut its way through the enemy's lines. After desperate fighting and heavy loss, all the regiments, except the Eighth Iowa, succeeded in cutting their way through the rebel forces. The Eighth Iowa, being ordered to cover the rear, was cut off by the enemy and nearly all captured. The regiments which succeeded in getting through the lines of the enemy did not all get together again, but reached the Chattahoochee River at different places. General McCook, with the Fifth Iowa, Eighth Indiana and Fourth Tennessee Cavalry, arrived at Philpot Ferry about midnight, and commenced crossing the troops on the ferry boat. The Eighth Indiana had succeeded in getting across when the enemy appeared in force and attacked the remainder of the command. Finding themselves opposed to overwhelming numbers, most of the men abandoned their horses, and a considerable number of them escaped by swimming the river. The mounted men, under General McCook, continued to retreat, and reached Marietta five days later. The dismounted men took to the woods in small parties and many were captured, while some escaped and reached the Union lines at different points, after suffering great hardships from hunger and exposure. They were constantly pursued, and it was marvelous that any of them succeeded in avoiding capture. The loss of the Fifth Iowa Cavalry in this raid was very heavy. First Lieutenant Andrew Guler, of Company E, was killed; First Lieutenant William T. Hays, of Company H, was taken prisoner, and 119 enlisted men were killed, wounded and captured.

The scattered remnants of the Fifth Iowa Cavalry were collected as they came in, at a camp near Sandtown, where they remained until August 18th. At this time the effective force of the regiment was but ninety men. With this remnant of the regiment, Major Young joined the Third Cavalry Division, under command of General Kilpatrick, in an expedition against the enemy, on the line of the Atlanta and West Point Railroad. General Kilpatrick, with the main force, moved directly against the enemy at East Point, while the Fifth Iowa and Third Indiana, under Lieutenant Colonel Kline, of the latter regiment, made a dash on the railroad at Fairburn, burning the depot, mills and storehouses, tearing up two miles of track, and returning with the loss of but one man wounded, and bringing in six prisoners. On the 26th of August the regiment again left its camp at Sandtown and, with the Third Indiana, made another rapid movement, marched all night, struck the railroad near Bear Creek Station, captured a commissary train, tore up a couple of miles of track, and, by hard marching all the following night, returned to camp. Several of the men, exhausted by their previous hard marching, halted for rest on the return march and were captured by the enemy.

On the 28th of August the regiment, now greatly reduced in numbers and with Major Young in command of the brigade (relieving Lieut. Col. Kline of the Third Indiana, who was compelled to relinquish the command on account of sickness) again moved, with the Third Cavalry Division, to the rear of the enemy at Jonesboro. In this movement the regiment lost heavily in proportion to its number engaged. Lieutenant Peter McGuire was killed, eight men were wounded and ten missing. The regiment was highly complimented by General O. O. Howard for its gallantry in action. On the 1st of September the regiment with its brigade covered the retreat to Jonesboro and East Point, going into camp at the latter place. Here it was joined by the veterans and recruits of the Fifth Iowa Infantry, then consolidated into two companies, I and G, under command of Captain Albert G. Ellis. Under an order of the War Department, dated August 18, 1864, these companies, constituting the remnant of the Fifth Iowa Infantry, had been transferred to and consolidated with the Fifth Iowa Cavalry, on account of the fact that neither regiment had a sufficient number of men left to maintain a separate regimental organization. These veteran soldiers of the Fifth Iowa Infantry had a splendid record of three years' hard service, which was continued with the Fifth Iowa Cavalry to the close of the war.⁷ The arduous campaign around Atlanta had so completely worn out the horses of the regiment that only thirty were fit for service at the time the consolidation with the Fifth Infantry took place. The regiment was therefore ordered to Nashville to be remounted and completely equipped.

On October 1, 1864, the consolidated regiment moved by rail towards Nashville. The water of the Chattahoochee River was at flood stage and the bridge was unsafe, but fortunately it stood until the train conveying the regiment had passed over it. Within twenty minutes after the train crossed, the bridge was swept away by the rushing waters, and the regiment proceeded on its way, saved from a great disaster. At Marietta the train lay all night and the next day, waiting for repairs to be made to the road, which had been damaged by the enemy, and a train loaded with supplies for the Union army captured. Information having been received that the construction party engaged in repairing the track had been attacked and driven off by the enemy, permission was obtained by Major Young to take his regiment and protect the working party until the repairs were completed. Accordingly the regiment proceeded to the point where the work was to be done. Upon its approach, the rebel force retreated and, by 10 o'clock at night, the road was repaired and the train moved on. On October 3d, at noon, the train conveying the regiment crossed the Etowah bridge at Allatoona and, in the afternoon, that bridge was swept away. That same evening, when within four miles of Dalton, the track was found torn up for a considerable distance. The regiment promptly proceeded to repair the damage, one-half the men going out on picket duty while the other half worked all night and until noon the next day, when the damage was repaired and the train was again under way. The regiment reached Nashville without further mishap on the 6th of October, and went into camp near the city. It remained there until October 27th, when it moved by rail to Louisville, Ky., where Major Young succeeded in procuring 500 horses, and, on November 3d, the regiment began its march on the return to Nashville, where it arrived on November 14th. It was soon after supplied with 500 Spencer carbines, and otherwise fully equipped for a renewal of active operations against the enemy.⁸

On the 22d of November the regiment was again upon the march and, on the 24th, was within four miles of Columbia, Tenn., which was threatened with an attack. The Fifth Iowa formed in line of battle about a mile from Columbia awaiting the attack, but the enemy retired and moved towards Pulaski; the Fifth Iowa followed, taking the advance, with orders to develop the enemy's position and report to General Stanley. The movement was successfully executed, and Major Young, who was in command of the regiment, was complimented by the General for the promptness with which his order was executed. It was discovered that the rebel General Forrest was approaching with a strong force, and four companies of the Fifth Iowa were sent across Duck River to watch his movements. About three miles from the river the advance guard of the rebel cavalry force was discovered and the detachment retreated across the river and rejoined the regiment, which soon became engaged with the advance of the enemy, and, by hard fighting, successfully resisted his passage of the river until dark. It was then discovered that the enemy had crossed the river ⁸As limitation of space has compelled the compiler to omit many details of the operations of the regiment, in the preceding pages, he also finds himself constrained with the necessity of condensing the history of its concluding operations, replete with the thrilling incidents which will be recalled by those survivors of the regiment who may read this imperfect sketch. The student of the military history of the State will, however, find these details more fully described in the history of the regiment, reference to which has heretofore been made.

in heavy force, above, and that the Fifth Iowa, Sixteenth Illinois and Eighth Michigan Regiments were penned up in a bend of the river with a line of the enemy in their rear. A charge was at once ordered by Major Young and, with his regiment in the advance, the three regiments cut their way through the enemy's lines, and at 11 o'clock at night reported at Major General Wilson's headquarters. The General complimented Major Young and his regiment for the gallant manner in which they had led the charge and extricated the command from its perilous position. The loss of the Fifth Iowa Cavalry in this encounter was fifteen men, killed, wounded and missing. From November 29th to December 1st the regiment took part in the operations of the cavalry corps which was co-operating with the army under command of Major General Thomas, and during the battle of Franklin, and after the battle, rendered important service in covering the rear and flanks of the army. There is no record of casualties in the Fifth Iowa during these operations.

On the 1st of December the regiment was in camp at Edgefield, on the Cumberland River, opposite Nashville. On December 2d Lieutenant Colonel Beard assumed command of the regiment. On December 12th the entire cavalry corps moved across the Cumberland River for the purpose of taking part in the movement of General Thomas against the rebel army of General Hood, then investing the city of Nashville. On the 15th of December General Thomas assumed the offensive, and the battle of Nashville was fought, during which Lieutenant John W. Watson of Company H, Fifth Iowa Cavalry, was killed. The regiment joined in the pursuit of the defeated enemy, and during the pursuit had several skirmishes, the most notable of which occurred on December 25th, at the town of Pulaski and at the bridge over Richland Creek. In these encounters the regiment lost twenty men, killed and wounded. The pursuit was continued until the last troops of General Hood's shattered rebel army had been driven across the Tennessee River. On December 31, 1864, the Fifth Iowa Cavalry went into camp on the bank of Elk River.

There is no record of any important operation in which the regiment took part during the remainder of the winter. Major J. M. Young was promoted Colonel of the regiment January 25, 1865, to succeed Colonel W. W. Lowe, who was mustered out and received an honorable discharge from the service January 24, 1865.*

The last great movement in which the regiment participated was the cavalry raid, under Brevet Major General James H. Wilson. The part of the Fifth Iowa Cavalry in that famous raid is thus described in the official report of Colonel Young:

HEADQUARTERS FIFTH IOWA CAVALRY,

Macon, Ga., April 24, 1865.

GENERAL: In accordance with instructions from your headquarters, I have the honor to report, that during the campaign of the Cavalry Corps, M. D. M., commencing from Chickasaw Bluffs, Ala., on the morning of the 22d of March, 1865, and now arrested at this place, the Fifth Regiment of Iowa Veteran Volunteer Cavalry has marched five hundred and eighty-two miles. On Tuesday, the 28th ult., the regiment being in the advance, skirmished very slightly with a few of the enemy, from Five Mile Creek to the town of Elyton, capturing two of them, belonging to the Alabama Cavalry (Colonel Patterson commanding), near the town. This Confederate regiment had been hastily withdrawn from the Huntsville and Decatur Roads, on which it expected we would have advanced, and had passed through Elyton but a few hours previous to our advance entering. No loss or accident during the day. On Friday,

*Colonel Lowe had not been on duty with the regiment since he was assigned to the command of the Third Cavalry Division, in May, 1864. On August 1, 1864, he was ordered to Nashville and assigned to duty in the Department of the Cumberland, and there is no record of his having rejoined the regiment. The record shows the date of his muster out, January 24, 1865, and that he was given the rank of Brevet Brigadier General, United States Volunteers, March 13, 1865.

the 31st ult., at Montevallo, about 11:30 o'clock A. M., the enemy showed themselves in some force, in line. The Fifth Iowa Cavalry being in advance, and with one and one-half companies, which, with the non-commissioned staff and orderlies, comprised about sixty men in all, in column on the main road to Randolph, charged the enemy, breaking their lines, and following them up so closely as to frustrate their attempts to rally. After running our horses for about one and a half miles at the full charge, the heat and exhaustion were so great as to compel us to dismount. Our force proceeded on foot, driving the enemy one or two miles further, when we were relieved by the First Brigade of the Fourth Division. In the charge (mounted) several of the enemy were ridden down and otherwise wounded; our force, however, was too small to guard the prisoners to the rear. As fast as they surrendered, they were faced about and ordered to the rear. Many undoubtedly took this opportunity to escape after surrendering. Twenty of these prisoners were received at corps headquarters. They belonged to Forrest's command, and some were of his provost guard. Proud of the honor of initiating this campaign, so promising in important results, the regiment vied with itself in giving eclat to this first meeting with the enemy in force. The regiment lost one man mortally wounded (since dead). Saturday, April 1st, the regiment took part in the battle at Ebenezer Church. Arriving at a critical time, it was hastily dismounted by companies, as they arrived, and these were thrown successively against the enemy, where they rivaled one another in pressing forward, and in their bravery and daring. Some of the men of the regiment were picked up after the fight, utterly exhausted, having charged about two miles on foot and wading Bogler's Creek, pursuing the enemy. The regiment captured one piece of artillery with lumber chest and horses. The capture of prisoners was completely ignored in the eagerness of the men to press forward so long as there was an enemy in front still showing resistance. Shortly after the complete rout of the enemy, we were relieved by the First Brigade, Fourth Division, charging in, mounted. Sunday, April 16th, Companies A and F, under special direction of Brevet Major General Upton, opened the assault upon Columbus, charging upon the enemy's right, and drawing their infantry and artillery fire. The regiment took a slight part in this engagement, by driving in the enemy's outposts and skirmish line in their front and center. We then lay down, under fire from the enemy's artillery, and awaited further orders. Companies E, L, and M, being my advance skirmish line, were ordered forward without my knowledge by the A. A. G., and took part in the general assault, which resulted in the capture of the enemy and place, without loss or accident. Each and every individual member of the regiment, both officers and men, have, during this campaign, seemed to contest with each other in bravery, daring and coolness, for the honor and glory of the regiment and the success of the cause; but neither opportunity nor accident offered to any individual the occasion for such distinction as would justify special mention.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. MORRIS YOUNG, Colonel
Commanding Fifth Iowa Cavalry

INDORSEMENT.

HEADQUARTERS SECOND BRIGADE, FOURTH DIVISION, C. C. M. D. M.
East Macon, Ga., April 25, 1865.

Respectfully forwarded. It is with great pleasure I endorse every word Colonel Young says about the gallantry and good conduct of his regiment. Braver soldiers never drew a saber.

[Signed] A. J. ALEXANDER,

Brevet Brigadier General, Commanding

Official: A. N. CANFIELD, Lieutenant and Acting Adjutant Fifth Iowa Cavalry

¹⁰The records of the Adjutant General's Office show that the Fifth Iowa Cavalry participated in the battle at Selma, Ala., April 1, 1865, but sustained no loss. No reference is made in the report of Colonel Young of the regiment being in that battle, and the compiler finds no further official reference to it than that above stated. As the battle of Ebenezer Church was fought on April 1, 1865, it would seem that Colonel Young should at least have mentioned the fact that his regiment was at Selma on the day following, even if it had taken no important part in the battle. For this reason the compiler makes mention of the notation found in the official record, which may or may not have been an error.

¹¹Report of Adjutant General of Iowa, 1866, page 140.

The loss of the regiment in this—its last raid—was eleven men, killed and wounded. On the march from Columbus to Macon intelligence of the cessation of hostilities was received. The regiment went into camp at Macon. After the capture of Jefferson Davis, Colonel Young, in command of detachments from the Fifth Iowa and the Seventh Ohio Cavalry, marched as a guard to the ex-President of the Confederacy, his family, and the rebel officers who had been captured with him, to Augusta. On his return march, Colonel Young took possession of the books and assets of the Bank of Tennessee. The assets consisted of $8,000,000 of Federal money, including nearly $1,000,000 in gold and silver, which was turned over to the Government of the United States upon the arrival of the command at Atlanta. The Fifth Iowa Cavalry was stationed at Atlanta until about the first of July, when it moved to Nashville, and thence to Macon, Ga. About the last of the month it returned to Nashville, where, on the 11th of August, 1865, it was mustered out of the service of the United States. The regiment was then furnished with transportation to Clinton, Iowa, and, upon its arrival there, was disbanded and the officers and men returned to their homes, there to resume the duties of citizens of the country they had fought to save.

The States of Iowa, Minnesota, Nebraska and Missouri were all honored by the service of this splendid regiment, but, from the date it was assigned to the State of Iowa and officially designated as an Iowa regiment, it became the duty of the Adjutant General of this State to keep the record of its operations and achievements. From that record, and from such other information as could be deemed reliable and authentic, this historical sketch has been compiled. The regiment occupies an honorable place in the history of the War of the Rebellion. Its surviving members and their posterity can well entertain a feeling of pride in the record of its heroic service. When the last member of the regiment shall have answered the final roll call and joined his comrades "on Fame's eternal camping ground," a grateful people will cherish the memory of the brave men who, through storm and sunshine, on the march, in bivouac, and battle, amid all the dangers and hardships that beset the life of the soldier, remained true and loyal to their flag and country and, by their valor, saved the Government of the United States from disruption and destruction.
